Governor Draper, in his speech at a Republican rally in Brockton Monday night, intimated that if he were reelected and a bill similar to the other eight hour

NO-LICENSE MEN ARE OPTIMISTIC AT CONFERENCE

Optimism in the cause of temperance marked the addresses at the evening session of the fourth annual conference of the eastern division of the Massachusetts No-License League in Ford building Monday evening.

"Massachusetts leads the states of the Union in the adoption and promotion of the policy of local option," declared President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot of Harvard University.

"We have been shown by the most recent researches that no drug nor the beverages of tea and coffee and cocoa nor tobacco can be used habitually without impairing human efficiency. It remains to be demonstrated that you can use any drug and do no harm."

"No-license is founded on the true American principle of trusting in the people and in public opinion," declared Bishop Lawrence. "Wherever no-license has failed it has done so because those who voted for it were not the ones to put into execution the laws which they made, and their wills were not executed."

Robert A. Woods of Boston discussed the "bar and bottle" bill, and Delcevare King, chairman of the league, also spoke. Former Gov. John D. Long presided.

BOSTON STREETS USED FOR PRIVATE BUSINESS

ADVERTISING SIGNS AT TREMONT AND WEST STREETS.
These furnish a sample of what the regulation becoming effective today is intended to remove and prevent in the future.

New Regulation Which Went into Effect Today Is Expected to Put End to This Practise of Advertising.

OFFENDERS MANY

The regulation which went into effect today forbidding the use of temporary structures, erected in the streets, for advertising purposes will abate that nuisance to a large extent in the opinion of city officials.

"Boston streets are exploited by private concerns for billposting purposes," said Edward T. Hartman, secretary of the Massachusetts Civic League, today, in speaking of the posters on bulwarks and boardings temporarily placed on the sidewalks while erecting or remodeling a building. In some cases large sums are paid by advertising firms for the use of these temporary structure, but the city, the actual owner of the space occupied, never receives a cent, Mr. Hartman said.

The licenses granted by the superintendent of streets for the erection of temporary structures of the kind are stamped with the following notice, which goes into effect today, in red ink: "It is understood by the holder of this permit that he is not to allow the placing or painting of advertising signs, or the posting of bills on any fence or other structure which he may erect, inclosing any portion of the public streets, granted him for building or other purposes unless a special permit shall be obtained allowing the same."

Campaign advertisers and theatrical billposters are the principal offenders, Mr. Hartman said, as they send out crews at night and seize upon any convenient space, whether on public property or not.

Legislation might be made to reach other things which inconvenience the public, continued Mr. Hartman. For instance, on a particularly narrow sidewalk in town there is a picture post card stand, which causes great annoyance in rush hours. Again the Elevated road is using the common for advertising purposes, whereas it was granted the site solely for an entrance to the subway.

"It is unseemly and illegal for the streets of Boston to be used in this way," said Mr. Hartman, "and much credit is due to the superintendent of streets for his stand in the matter."

S. L. Durkee of the street department, who has direct charge of licensing in such cases, said that those interested in the signs at Tremont and West streets asked that their bills might remain a few days longer, but that he thought the request would not be granted and that they would be required to remove them today.

MERGER BETWEEN THE ELEVATED AND WEST END IS URGED

Maj.-Gen. William A. Bancroft, president of the Boston Elevated Railway Company, appeared today before the railroad and transit commissions, sitting jointly at 15 Beacon street, to discuss several transportation questions and improvements put to the railway by that joint board.

"There is no question that the consolidation of the West End company on the basis of 8 per cent dividends on common stock would be the best solution for the community and the road," said General Bancroft. In its effort to provide every suburban community with direct and rapid approach to the business heart of Boston the railway had certainly succeeded, he claimed, and it wished to continue in the work, and for that reason requested the corporations of the community to cooperate with the company in the extension of its system.

"The company is willing," he declared, "to assume a rapid transit thoroughfare within a reasonable time from Park street to Dorchester by way of the South station and South Boston. But it is essential to this undertaking that the leases of the Tremont street subway, the East Boston tunnel and the Washington street tunnel be extended, and also that a single control of the Elevated and West End be provided.

"Today the two systems are a unit so fas as equipment and operation are concerned. Neither system can by itself convey the major part of the passengers from their point of departure or to their point of destination. The advantages from a public standpoint of a single control of the Elevated and West End are indisputable."

Regarding the so-called West End loop providing for a subway under Tremont street, Scollay square, Bowdoin square and Cambridge street, General Bancroft said that the Legislature had provided that there should be a choice of route either to Park street or Scollay square. This choice was given to the transit commissioners. Hearings were held and the decision was for Park street. It would be unfair now not only to do both but to do more than both as the proposition proposes, and even if it were not unfair, the provision would be costly and unsuitable to operate."

APPROVAL GIVEN TO ASSOCIATIONS OF CITY BANKERS

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh has just received and approved the organization of the Twin Cities National Currency Association, composed of bankers in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and of the St. Louis Association.

Up to date nine currency associations have actually been organized and approved by the secretary of the treasury. These are Washington, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Louisiana (with headquarters at New Orleans), Georgia (with headquarters at Atlanta), Chicago, Twin Cities and St. Louis.

The local currency association, which was formed about the middle of August, comprising nearly all of the Boston Clearing House banks, was approved by Secretary MacVeagh soon after organization was perfected. The association is now in a position to meet possible emergencies that may arise over currency questions. It does not, however, do anything unless the necessity arises. The association is able to put nearly $50,000,000 in circulation in a time of tight money. Thomas P. Beal, president of the Second National Bank, is president of the association.

TO PERPETUATE PEACE.

The Canadian Club has arranged its annual banquet to be held in the Parker house Nov. 22. It will be the most important celebration in the history of the club, for it will inaugurate the campaign for peace for 100 years between the United States, Great Britain and Canada.

DEMURRAGE REPORT MADE TO COMMERCE CHAMBER BY MR. IVES

The following statement was received over the long distance telephone today from D. O. Ives, manager of the transportation department of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, who is in New York:

"At the request of the New England Shippers special demurrage committee, composed of the members of the transportation committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce and a member from each of the six New England states, and with the assent of the New England railways, the interstate commerce commission yesterday made an announcement that will be epoch-making in its result of putting into the hands of an impartial body the settlement of all car service matters, taking away from one party—the railway—the exclusive

Immigration Inspector William J. Burke, who accompanied to San Francisco the four Chinese that were recently ordered deported to that city, returned today and resumed his duties at the immigration office. This is the first time that any Chinese were deported from Boston via San Francisco.

PRESIDENT MELLEN OUTLINES PLAN FOR COMMERCE COURT

Head of New Haven Road Proposes Adding Three Superior Session Judges to the Judiciary.

PLAN OF PROCEDURE

He Recommends That the Chief Justice Detail Such a Number From Time to Time as New Tribunal.

Merchants and manufacturers in Boston who are interested in the equitable settlement of controversies arising between mercantile firms or corporations and the railroads, are taking cognizance of the concise proposition made today by President C. S. Mellen of the New Haven road relative to the composition of a court of commerce.

Mr. Mellen's communication on the subject is a reply to queries by the Connecticut Editorial Association regarding his idea of a court of commerce, and he has outlined in brief and definite fashion a method of forming such a court, of which he says:

"Let the Legislature provide three additional judges of the superior court. Let the chief justice of the supreme court from time to time assign a judge or judges of the superior court to conduct the sessions of the court of commerce.

"This court should have legislative authority to act under its own simple rules of procedure and of evidence, which should be so framed as both to prevent delays in the settlement of controversies and also to give the freedom of inquiry necessary for the effective investigation and speedy and just determination of difficult and complex commercial questions.

"It is my belief that such a court would be better adapted to deal with a good many intricate commercial controversies than the ordinary court of justice with its technical and rigid procedure.

"But I now propose such a court only for the determination of controversies

BALTIMORE AVIATION MEET DRAWS FLIERS FROM BELMONT PARK

BALTIMORE, Md.—Aviators began arriving today from Belmont Park, N. Y., for the meet which opens here tomorrow and continues for a week. Those who will take part include, it is said, Hubert Latham, Count Jacques De Lesseps, J. Armstrong Drexel, James Radley, Charles F. Willard, Eugene E. Ely, Clifford B. Harmon and Glenn H. Curtiss.

The prize list totals nearly $60,000, and there will be competition for the Michelin cup and for the Commodore Barry trophy for bomb dropping. On one of the days of the meet Latham is to make a 20-mile flight over this city for a special prize offered by the Sun.

NEW YORK—At the close of the international aviation meet at Belmont Park last evening Ralph Johnstone alighted before the grand stand with the world's altitude record, his barograph registering 9714 feet, 528 feet more than the height attained in France on Oct. 2 by Henry Wynmalen of Holland.

J. Armstrong Drexel, who, although an American, was reared in England, announced at a dinner given to a number of fellow-aviators Monday night that he would resign from the Aero Club of America "in disgust" because of the ruling prohibiting Grahame-White from a second try at the $10,000 statue of Liberty flight, won by John B. Moisant.

MILITIA OFFICERS' SCHOOLS IN STATE ARE COMMENCING

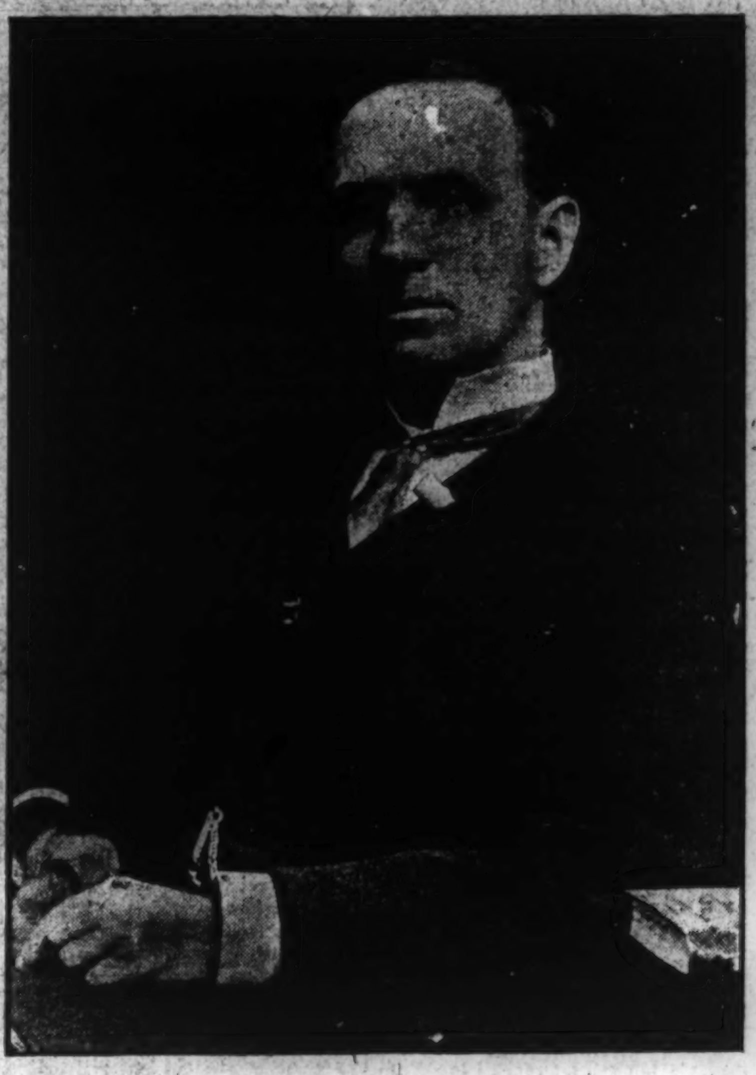
CONCORD, N. H.—School for the officers of the state militia organizations begins today.

Adjt.-Gen. H. B. Cilley has arranged for the school to be held twice a month until May 31, 1911. Sessions will be held in each city and town where there is a national guard organization. Lieut. Col. H. E. Tutherly, U. S. A., retired, on duty with the New Hampshire militia, will have charge.

Written examinations will be held at the end of December and in April. Officers who attain 75 per cent will qualify and those who do not will be classed as failing and ordered to retake the course.

The regular annual drill period for the various militia organizations will also begin today. Colonel Tutherly will be in charge, with Sergeant Walter Chamberlain, fifth U. S. infantry, assistant instructor.

LORD MORLEY RESIGNS, REPORT FROM LONDON



VISCOUNT JOHN MORLEY.
British secretary of state for India, who is said to have retired, and whose most probable successor is mentioned as the Earl of Crewe.

LONDON—Viscount Morley, it is said today, has resigned the office of secretary of state for India, and the fact that he declines information on the subject is accepted as confirmation of the report of his retirement.

The viscount it is known for some time has desired to vacate his post. The Earl of Crewe is mentioned as likely to succeed Viscount Morley.

Lord Morley has filled many parts in his life, and filled them all with distinction. He is the foremost man of letters today in England, and there is little danger in prophesying that such books as "Compromise," "Voltaire," and "Rousseau" will find a lasting place in English literature.

As secretary of state for Ireland in the difficult days of the Gladstone home rule bill, he managed to maintain his political opinions without forfeiting the respect of any of his political opponents, while in later days, as secretary of state for India, he has given evidence of a breadth of view and an administrative firmness which have won the admiration of those who had most questioned the advisability of his appointment.

NEW YORK STRIKE MAY SPREAD TO ALL CITY TRAFFIC

International Teamsters Union Will Decide Tonight Whether to Aid Expressmen, Calling Out 100,000.

NEW YORK—The calling out of 100,000 union teamsters, chauffeurs and helpers in New York city and the ordering of a nation-wide strike of all express drivers and helpers is discussed today as a result of the express drivers' strike in this city.

The question of calling a sympathetic strike of all unions affiliated with the International Teamsters Union will be decided at a meeting of the executive committee tonight. Should it be ordered, the union officials declare that practically all vehicle traffic in New York will at once cease.

In an effort to end the strike conferences were held this afternoon in Jersey City between the officials of the express companies, representatives of the men, Governor Fort of New Jersey, Mayor Wittpenn of Jersey City and representatives of the Civic Federation. All the companies and officials of the union agreed to arbitration, except the United States Express Company officials.

Three hundred non-unionists from Baltimore were landed today at the foot of Cortland street from a Pennsylvania ferry. Under guard of 20 mounted policemen the men were escorted to the Adams Express Company's stables at 38 Trinity place. They were put to work immediately.

John C. Warner, a civil engineer of Highwood, Conn., mistaken for an express company guard by strike sympathizers, was attacked Monday night by them and severely injured. He came to New York to start on a hunting trip.

He wore a khaki suit and carried a gun last night as he emerged from a Seventh street restaurant. This led a crowd of men and boys to believe him a guard and they set upon him.

FISHING VESSEL STRUCK BY LINER

A collision just off the New Haven docks, South Boston, occurred early today between the Warren liner Michigan, Captain Adams, from Liverpool, and the fishing schooner Jennie H. Gilbert, bound out for the fishing grounds.

The schooner was struck aft and carried away her mainsail and main boom.

The Michigan, in port for the first time in seven months, brought a large cargo from Liverpool.

AQUA-AERIAL TRAIN MAY FLY TO LONDON, DECLARES INVENTOR

WAKEFIELD, Mass.—Dana Dudley of this town, inventor of the pan angle telescope adopted a year ago by the United States war department, has completed a model of a heavier than air machine which he claims will accomplish a trip across the Atlantic.

Mr. Dudley declines to discuss the details of the machine until he has a patent, for which he will probably make application this week. His plan is to use both air and water in aerial navigation and he believes that he can attain a speed of from 100 to 150 miles an hour.

He calls his invention an "aqua-aerial train," by which he means a heavier than air machine that will travel through the air the same as the airship of today, but which will be so constructed on the bottom that it will skip over the water like any concave vessel propelled by force from the rear.

The object of this is to give the aerial navigator security in case of accident to the planes, rigging or machinery, or to enable him to glide over the water if he desires to repair the engine or to reduce speed.

Mr. Dudley claims that the aqua-aerial train can be built for about the cost of two or three touring cars. If he is successful in getting it patented and in raising funds with which to build it, he will at first experiment on the Great lakes and if the invention proves practicable, attempt a transatlantic cruise. He would start from Newfoundland and not from Atlantic City.

LENNOX BRINGS TEA FROM FAR EAST TO PORT BEFORE TIME

Coming in two days ahead of time, the British steamer Lennox, Captain Reid, with tea and mixed freight, berthed at Mystic wharf early today from Yokohama, Shanghai, Hiogo, and other ports in the far east, having left the first named port Aug. 11.

Of the 6500 tons of cargo brought in on the vessel, only 1500 tons is destined for Boston and the remainder will be taken on by the Lennox to New York.

Large shipments of tea comprise a great part of the freight, which also includes porcelain, curios, straw braid, bamboos, copper ingots, bean oil, earthenware, matting, hair, cotton waste, paper lanterns, Chinese goods, Korean cabinets, etc.

There were 34 Chinese in the crew.

STEAMSHIP LINES READY IF BOSTON CAN SHOW GOODS

Several Companies Reported Willing to Come to This City if They Are Given Adequate Facilities.

NEED DOCKAGE NOW

Willing to Take Up With Anything if the Future Gives Guarantee of Meeting Their Demands.

If Boston can show the operators of certain large transatlantic steamship lines how they can secure proper terminal facilities, with low terminal rates and quick transportation of freight to and from Atlantic liners, several companies are believed to be ready to begin negotiations to make Boston the eastern terminal point for their large vessels.

These steamship companies do not want to wait until new docks are built. They want terminals now. They explain that business is increasing. They are taxed to their capacity. If docking facilities cannot be secured now they cannot let their business wait until new docks are built.

That these companies would be willing to come to Boston and put up for a time with docks that are not just what they are looking for, but that would answer the purposes until new are secured, is thought by many interested in the subject to be assured. But it is emphatically declared that Boston's past course in waterfront development has not been of so high a standard as to give big corporations the assurance they desire.

It is argued by steamship men who would like to come to Boston that there is a lot of talk going on about developments. Though plans have been published in the newspapers the Legislature has allotted funds to build docks in East Boston, the federal government has changed the harbor line so that at least two docks can be constructed, no ground has yet been broken. In fact, they point out, no one seems to be able to find that any definite plans are decided upon. It is claimed by these persons watching the situation that some definite steps toward getting docks under construction ought to have been under way ere this.

The steamship companies have heard of plans. They know that there is a fine opportunity for the development of the flats in Boston harbor. They know of the 35-foot channel, without its bends, of the project to light the channel at night to permit navigation through the dark. But they argue that they do not seem to be able to see the real important project, the docks, getting under way.

Boston's waterfront has dockage that, with a certain amount of good business judgment, could be temporarily leased by the municipality or the state. Inducements might be offered, steamship men say, to get liners to berth temporarily at these docks. But before this is done the company contemplating coming to Boston would have to have in their pockets a black and white agreement, which would tell what the docks, etc., would be and most important of all when the construction work would start.

Another argument by steamship representatives is the fact that just now the time is ripe for getting new liners to Boston: Rush of business, no good terminal facilities in New York and other reasons. The companies cannot wait three or four years for Boston to find out what she intends to do. The steamship men say they want action while business is good.

The federal government expects to know what the plans of those now working on a project for docks, etc., on the East Boston flats are to be Jan. 1. The harbor line must be changed before any extensive improvements are to take place. This is going to entail another delay. It will take at least a month to get a board assembled and probably another month for a report to come back from Washington approved unless a rush order is put on it.

Boston, it is declared today, has the talent to make big waterway developments. Living in and around the city at the present time are four retired officers of the corps of engineers, United States army. All of the officers have had experience in waterfront development and are of the same high standing as the army engineers now building the Panama canal and raising the Maine in Havana harbor.

Army engineers get small pay; there is no politics in their work. No matter what they do, they do it for the success of the project. Their army training at the West Point military academy instilled into them the one slogan, "What you do, do right."

It has been excellently suggested that their aid be enlisted in developing Boston's waterfront by appointing them on a body to consider the project, lay out the plans and proceed with them. No delay would be entailed if they had the matter in hand, it is said, another feature being they would have but on

SALVATION ARMY CARING FOR CRIMINAL TRIBES OF INDIA

Commissioner Booth Tucker Gives Details of the Scheme—Have Now Two Thousand Men, Women and Children Under Their Care in the Punjab.

(Special to The Monitor.)

BOMBAY — Reference was made recently in these columns to a speech delivered by General Booth at Filey, in which he expressed the readiness of the Salvation Army to take charge of the 3,000,000 people who go to form the criminal tribes of India. In a recent interview with a representative of the Times of India, Commissioner Booth Tucker gave further information with respect to the details of the scheme. He explained that the Salvation Army had at present some 2000 men, women and children of certain tribes in the United Provinces and in the Punjab under their care. To these they were teaching certain industries, and though they found some of them very difficult to deal with, still they were on the whole very pleased with the progress made.

"It should be borne in mind," said the commissioner, "that the criminals of India differ somewhat from the criminals of other parts of the world, inasmuch as they are very highly organized and among them crime is looked upon as a respectable calling. The criminal of Europe is an individual. He is a creation or an accident of civilization, but he is an individual, and he is not organized like the Indian criminals. The Indian criminal is born in a caste which regards thieving as a respectable occupation." He went on to say that the criminal tribes contained two classes of men, the "would be goods" and the "won't be goods." Their object was to rescue the former from the influence of the latter, and to bring them back to an honest living again. These men in their turn might be expected to reform their less tractable brethren. He found that if they were given suitable occupation they took to it like ducks to water. In his opinion, "the best way to make a thief honest is to make him a property owner. Give him property of his own and he no longer wants to take other property."

The commissioner stated that he felt sure that what seemed a difficult problem could be solved by careful and kindly reformatory influences and the finding of employment. He knew of one district where there were 1500 of one criminal tribe and 1000 police to look after them, and a police officer had told him that if he could take charge of one tribe of a few hundred he could reduce his force by 200 men.

BIDS FOR NEW BUILDING.

OTTAWA—Bids for the new departmental buildings at Ottawa, estimated to cost between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000, will be invited in December. The plans, which have been changed so that the building will not encroach upon MacKenzie avenue, are about finished, and notices have been served upon the tenants of properties on the site to vacate by Nov. 30.

LONDON—The garage constructed by the Daily Mail in six weeks at a cost of $30,000 now houses the Clement-Bayard airship which made such a successful journey from Lamotte-Breuil to Wormwood Scrubs on Sunday, Oct. 16. The route followed was from Lamotte-Breuil to Amiens and thence to Abbeville, Etaples, Boulogne, and thence over the channel to Folkestone, and from Folkestone to Sevenoaks, and thence direct to London. For over a year arrangements have been in progress for the accomplishment of this great trip, which marks the first occasion on which a dirigible balloon has crossed the English channel. The route followed covered about 220 miles, and the average speed maintained was about 35 miles an hour. The war office dirigible balloon, the Beta, is about half the size of Clement-Bayard II., the latter being 250 feet long and with a gas capacity of 247,000 c. ft. The weather was favorable, and contributed largely to the success of the journey. Some 3000 persons had assembled to witness the arrival of the giant air craft at Wormwood Scrubs, and a company of the Irish guards, together with a force of police, were on duty to assist in keeping the ground and housing the dirigible. The following is a list of the more important towns passed on the route with the times of arrival at each:

BERLIN NOTES

(Special Correspondence of The Monitor.)

BERLIN—Distinct success has attended the latest national flying week at the Johannisthal aviation ground. The beautiful weather and the certainty of seeing at least eight or nine aeroplanes in the air at once attracted thousands of people every afternoon until the sun set. The biggest prize, 25,000 marks, offered by the ministry of war, was gained by the Munich airman, Lindpaintner, who on his Sommer biplane had remained over 11 hours in the air, while Wiencziers, one of the most skilful of German fliers as also one of the youngest, won the prize for altitude, having attained 1560 meters. The youngest airman who competed was a lad of 17 on a monoplane of his own design, with which he made his first flight of a quarter of a mile.

On the last day the crown prince and princess motored to the ground and followed the proceedings with the keenest interest. The prince presented Herr Wiencziers with a diamond scarf pin, and talked in turn to all the air-men. His imperial highness has added, if possible, to his great popularity by a recent act of unusual courtesy toward a photographer, who was endeavoring to take some films for a cinematograph of the troops exercising on Tempelhof field. He had asked in vain for permission of the officers, but good luck took him into the vicinity of the prince, who, seeing the man's difficulty, at once interposed, saying he was a photographer himself. Not only did the future kaiser give unrestricted permission, but he even had the troops placed in the best light for the purpose. The man was busy over an hour, and retired with a camera full of splendid films and overjoyed at the prince's kindness.

The German retired officer and well known authority on things military, Colonel Gaedke, who attended the British army maneuvers in September, has published his impressions in the Berliner Tageblatt, the most widely circulated Radical paper here. He expresses himself in the most scathing terms concerning the officers, declaring that the material, meaning the men, is first class and capable of almost anything under better management. Great Britain, he says, cannot rank among the first military powers and compared with the armies of France, Germany or Japan is altogether unfit for conflict. The troops, he declares, may be very good for Asiatic or colonial warfare by reason of their coolness and daring, but the commanders have not the least idea of handling troops in masses; the army is, in fact, organized in single battalions instead of as a whole. There is no cooperation to speak of between the firing and attacking lines and their reserves or supports, but each battalion fights by itself without paying any attention to what is going on around it. The umpires' decisions were, writes Colonel Gaedke, perfectly incomprehensible in their irreconcilableness with what must really have occurred according to the position of things; the decisions were so flatly contradictory of all the possibilities of war that entirely untenable tactical theories must be attributed to the British generals.

At the large party assembled for the banquet given by the Kaiser to the university guests last week were half a dozen undergraduates, all commoners, and selected from the various faculties. His majesty chatted in his genial way with the youths about their studies, but soon the conversation took a graver turn. The Kaiser turned the subject to the excessive beer drinking customary among German university students, which not even the good example set them by the crown prince and his brothers during their university career has lessened. His majesty kindly but very energetically expressed his disapproval of the vice, telling the young men that it injured their prospects of success in life. He advocated very warmly the practise of athletic sports on American and English lines, declaring that outdoor games and beer drinking were incompatible. The youths listened with obvious agreement to the Kaiser's sentiments and promised amendment. The consumption of beer during the university festivities has been something almost unprecedented and doubtless the Kaiser's remarks were due to this. At a "beer evening" organized by the undergraduates, at which many of the professors were present, 4000 gallons were drunk in less than three hours.

TOWN PLANNING CONGRESS DRAWS WORLD'S ARCHITECTS

LONDON—The first town planning congress held in London met for its final sitting on Friday afternoon, Oct. 14. The large attendance was undiminished to the end, and overflow meetings had frequently to be arranged. Architects from all over the world were gathered together and such a meeting of experts cannot but have done much to clear the way for the more definite work of future conferences. It must rank as a public function, since it enjoyed the King's gracious patronage, and at the inaugural meeting, "this large, distinguished and international congress" was welcomed by John Burns on behalf of the prime minister and the government. The American ambassador showed his ready sympathy with the progressive aims of the undertaking, was present at some of the meetings and opened the hospitable doors of the embassy to many of the delegates. Sir Gilbert Parker, M. P., took part in the discussion on the "town planning act and open spaces," and Lord Kitchener presided over the meeting at which the paper on "The Planning of Omdurman and Khartoum," by Mr. McLean, was read. Augustine Rey and Eugene Henard of Paris, Professor Reilly and D. H. Burnham (of Chicago), had much that was interesting to say on "The Cities of the Future."

Many and amazing are the changes they advocate and predict for the "better times" that are coming. Dr. Eberstadt of Berlin said that "Germany was the only land where they could study closely in connection town planning, street planning and the basis of social life, housing."

Many other remarkable papers were contributed, and the congress is authoritatively pronounced to have been a great success. During the week visits were paid to the garden-suburbs planned by Raymond Unwin, Mr. Lutyens and their colleagues, and also to other places of interest to the delegates.

SPEECH OF CHINESE PRINCE ENCOURAGES PARLIAMENT HOPES

PEKING—A statement made in the Senate Monday by Prince Yu Lang, a member of the Grand Council, that the entire nation from highest to lowest is agreed upon the necessity of the early establishment of a general parliament was accepted as notice that the throne has decided to accede to the demand of the Senate and provincial delegates for the early convocation of a representative national Legislature.

Several grand councilors were present when Prince Yu made his declaration, which was received with long continued demonstrations of enthusiastic approval.

The importance of the concession of a representative national body on the part of the government can be scarcely overestimated in view of the throne's recent refusal to entertain a similar request made by a delegation from the provincial assemblies.

The program fixed by the Empress Dowager provided for the constitution of a general representative legislative body, to be known as the Imperial Parliament, in 1915, at the end of a nine-year period of preparation.

No sooner had this plan been made known in a decree than a popular agitation was begun to influence the throne to advance the date.

The provincial assemblies met and discussed the matter and received the support of the merchants throughout the country. They sent a delegation to Peking to memorialize the throne, but the prince regent, who had succeeded the Empress Dowager, announced that the original program would be adhered to.

In October last the Senate met for the first time. Of its members a large percentage had been appointed by the throne, and there was every indication that it would accomplish but little, except as it reflected the wishes of the central government.

Nevertheless the Senate early developed an opposition party, composed of the provincial delegates, and this party has since conducted an active campaign, looking to recognition of the Senate by the Grand Council, as a body with executive power, rather than that its deliberations should be of an advisory character.

Meantime the Viceroys and Governors of provinces supported the opposition by memorializing the throne regarding an early opening of the proposed Parliament.

On Oct. 26 the Senate adopted by an almost unanimous vote a memorial to the throne praying for the establishment of a popular Parliament at the earliest possible moment.

Two days later the throne ordered the Grand Council to consider the memorial and Monday's announcement by Prince Yu Lang is accepted as the decision of the grand councilors that the popular demand should be granted.

FARMERS ADOPTING COOPERATIVE PLAN IN NEW ZEALAND

(Special to The Monitor.)

AUCKLAND, N. Z.—A large cooperative dairying concern of considerable importance is in operation in the North island. An interesting system has been adopted which greatly facilitates the working of the concern. It consists in the connection of all the outlying buildings and farms by means of a telephone system. A cable is laid under the river, to which many miles of wire on both sides are linked-up. By means of this telephone, all the outlying store keepers, farmers and suppliers are connected to the private exchange of the company. The facilities and saving of time by this method are obvious. Each farmer purchases his own instrument and pays his share in the expense of the management and upkeep, which does not amount to more than £1 a year. The progressive policy of the company is illustrated by the fact that, in the event of a new settler arriving, he is if necessary provided with monetary assistance in the shape of a supply of the necessary implements being provided for him on the hire purchase system.

GREAT BRITAIN MAY TEACH PERSIA HOW TO RESTORE ORDER

Note Is Despatched to Teheran Giving Notice Conditions Must Be Improved Within Three Months.

KASHAN DISORDER

(Special to The Monitor.)

TEHERAN, Persia—The unsettled condition of affairs in Persia, and especially in the south, continues, with the result that the roads in that part of the country are in an extremely unsatisfactory condition and the trade is being seriously interfered with. As a result of this [illegible] condition of affairs, a note has been despatched to the Persian government by the British government, in which it is pointed out that representations on the subject of the disorders in the south have already been made. It is further pointed out that unless order is restored within three months, the British government will feel compelled to take certain measures for restoring order.

Should the British government be compelled to take action in this matter, it is understood that a local force will be organized under the command of Anglo-Indian officers, the maintenance of this force being paid for out of a charge of 10 per cent which will be made on the customs.

It will readily be seen that, supposing it is not possible to raise a large enough force locally and that Indian troops are employed, the Persians will be wondering whether this action constitutes the first step towards the partition of their country. The organization of such a force will undoubtedly produce an excellent effect and will in all probability result in the speedy restoration of a normal condition of affairs in the south. In the meantime reports are being received of considerable disorders at Kashan, where the Bakhtiaris are endeavoring to subdue Naib Hussein.

PENNY POSTAGE QUESTION NOW BEFORE PREMIER

(Special to The Monitor.)

PARIS—The question of penny postage between Great Britain and France is not going to be allowed to rest by those who are supporting the movement. Reference has already been made on several occasions to this question in these columns, and it has been pointed out that the proposal has been received most favorably in France. The question has again been brought to the notice of the public by a parliamentary deputation including Lord Blyth, Sir E. Sassoon, Henniker Heaton and some members of the British Chamber of Commerce in Paris, who waited upon M. Briand, the premier, for the purpose of urging the advantages of Franco-British penny postage. M. Briand spoke favorably with regard to the question and said that it would be laid before the government for consideration.

MEXICAN CENSUS IS COMPLETED

MEXICO CITY—The taking of Mexico's population census was finished today. The compilations of the different states and municipalities are not yet finished, but it is expected that they will be ready for the official announcement in a few days.

It is indicated that the total population of the country will exceed 16,000,000 people, which is an increase of nearly 4,000,000 during the last 10 years.

The teacher representatives of the schools voted to have the league season open Jan. 1 instead of Dec. 14, the original date selected, and the headmasters of the Boston high schools will pass on this point. DARTMOUTH HOLDS LONG SIGNAL DRILL

Students Have Plenty of Confidence in Team, Despite Defeat by Princeton—Two Changes Made.

HANOVER, N. H.—Practise was held by the Dartmouth football squad on the field Monday afternoon as usual. Every man is in good condition, and no one was laid off except Daley. The team that lined up against Princeton held a long signal practise. Two changes were made in the line-up. Captain Ryan was playing at right end in Cottrell's place, and George Hoban took right halfback, Ryan's position. The coaches did not state whether this change would be permanent or temporary.

The second team lined up against the third team in a lively scrimmage. George Hoban at right half and Dudley at left tore large holes in the third team's line. Hoban at quarter made some good gains, too. The work of Dudley was especially noticeable. He is showing up in good old form and will be given a thorough try-out before the Amherst game.

Johnson, who has been out of the game for three weeks, was back and took part in the scrimmage.

FIRST BUMPING RACES ON TODAY

The first of the Harvard interdormitory races will be rowed on the Charles river this afternoon. The races will start at the end of the long stretch above the Boylston street bridge, beyond the second bend, and will finish at an imaginary line between the bridge end of the Newell boathouse floats and a range flag. The crews will row in two divisions, starting at 3:45 and 4:15 o'clock respectively, and will take their positions in the following order:

First division—1, Thayer; 2, Randolph; 3, Claverly; 4, Weld.

Second division—1, Mt. Auburn street; 2, Brentford; 3, Dunster-Dana-Drayton; 4, Perkins; 5, Russell.

TECH AND TUFTS TO MEET.

YALE VARSITY ELEVEN AT WORK

CANDIDATES FOR THE BIG BLUE TEAM WORKING HARD FOR CHAMPIONSHIP HONORS.

HARD PRACTISE IS PLANNED FOR HARVARD ELEVEN

Candidates Show Up Strongly in Contest With Second Eleven, Wendell's Work Being Chief Feature.

The first hard practice of the week is scheduled for the Harvard varsity football squad on Soldier's field this afternoon and it is expected that all of the first-string men will be on hand. As usual it it will be held behind closed gates and the coaches plan to devote much time to correcting the faults which showed up in the West Point contest.

Most of the regulars were given a rest Monday, and Frothingham, Wigglesworth, Huntington, Felton, Graustein, Campbell, Wendell were the only men in the West Point game to report. H. Leslie, the halfback, was out and given several laps around the field.

T. H. Frothingham was out for the first time in a week or so, and was given hard work in the scrimmage against the second varsity, in which he did the punting for the substitutes in good style.

Both the second team and the subs had a brief signal drill, and then the scrimmage took place, in which the subs scored three touchdowns by hard and fast playing. Neither team was able to rush the opposing line for steady gains, and as a result both resorted to open play. Several good passes were made by Gardner and his ends, and many more fell into the hands of the aggressive secondary defence of the seconds.

Wendell of the substitutes did the best work of the afternoon. His best run came after the kickoff in the second period, when he carried the ball back to midfield from the 10-yard line, with very little help from his teammates. Two of the three touchdowns of the afternoon also fell to his credit after a varied attack had placed the ball within striking distance.

Paul Withington and Fulton Cutting were the only assistant coachers on the field. The lineup:

COLUMBIA GETS SWIMMING MEET FOR NEXT YEAR

NEW YORK — The intercollegiate Swimming Association held an important meeting at Columbia University Monday and decided that the championship meet will take place this year in the Columbia pool on March 4 or March 11, 1911. The date was left in abeyance because several of the delegates were not quite certain that their faculty committee would permit them to arrange a definite time without consultation. It will be the first time in several years that the meet has been held at Columbia.

Amherst, Williams and Brown were invited to become members of the league, and it is probable they will be admitted to the association in December. Amherst had a representative at the meeting, who urged that the three teams be admitted. Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, H. Stoddard, Yale; vice-president, R. M. Battles, Princeton; secretary-treasurer, R. C. Patterson, Columbia.

The delegates who attended the meeting were: Columbia, R. E. Kinsman and R. C. Patterson; Cornell, W. J. Thorne and W. Walker; Pennsylvania, R. Anthony; Princeton, F. J. Wallace and E. C. Denniston; Yale, L. G. Day and E. M. Richards.

REPORT FOR FRESHMAN FIVE.

NEW HAVEN—About 30 candidates for the Yale freshman basketball team appeared at the gymnasium Monday night in answer to the call issued by Captain Finnessy '11S. Speeches were made by Coach Lush, Manager Rowland and the captain. The interclass games will begin next Monday and the following captains were announced: P. T. Allen '11, T. Pittman '12, H. C. Legg '11S, W. Osborne '12S, E. Reilly '13, J. E. Parker '11LS.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT IN YALE FOOTBALL PLEASES COACHES

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—The decided change in Yale's mode of offense which is being worked up this week and first appeared in the Colgate game is effecting an improvement in the team's playing which a week ago did not seem possible. The change is merely the working out of a carefully devised plan of Yale's coaches of first training the team to gain ground under extremely unfavorable conditions of having to play the simple old-fashioned football, and then applying the advantages of the new game. Today the coaches are well satisfied with the progress of the eleven.

It is evident, however, that there is still a decided weakness in Yale's offense. This was shown when the team was kept from scoring four times when within 10 yards of Colgate's goal line, and as a final resort a place kick had to be used simply because of the lack of an appropriate mode of attack. Whether or not the difficulty will be eliminated before the big games seems to lie entirely within the power of the coaches, since the team itself did not show any depreciation at those particular moments.

The return of Howe to the game has added strength as well as a decided snap to the playing of the eleven. Although he weighs only 155 pounds, he is sure to rank among the best college fullbacks of the year. Besides being an excellent punter he possesses ability as an end runner and is a valuable man in interference. On the defense he is just as valuable, being sure in catching and running back punts and tackling.

Both Fields and Bomeisler are again in condition to play in the Brown game Saturday. In the Wesleyan and Syracuse games these men proved to be the most valuable players on the team. Upon his return to the game Fields will undoubtedly displace Baker at left halfback, who, though he is a brilliant end runner, is too light for line plunging, weighing but 140 pounds With Fields, Howe and Captain Daly in the game, Yale will have a strong backfield. It is doubtful yet whether Bomeisler will be able to displace Brooks on the first eleven, for the latter has proved to be a tower of strength at end. It is almost certain, however, that he will be seen in a part of the big games at least.

The great improvement in the eleven has come as a surprise to Yale's supporters. The outlook for a successful eleven, which up till last week looked extremely gloomy, now appears to be as bright as in former years. Both Coach Coy and Captain Daly, who have been optimistic during the entire season, were more than gratified when they first realized the great improvement in the team. They hope for greater improvement in the next two weeks before the Princeton game.

MECHANIC ARTS HIGH HAS STRONG SCHOOL ELEVEN

Coach Matthews Is Working Up a Promising Eleven From Four Veterans and Many New Candidates.

The eleven representing Mechanic Arts high school this year is one of the best ever turned out at that school. At the beginning of the season about 50 candidates reported to Coach Mathews, who was formerly connected with Dorchester high, among whom were but four veterans and few who had any real football experience.

Since then they have shown up exceptionally well in the games thus far played, barring the one with Waltham.

Capt. Warren Mooney is one of the smaller type of player, who makes up for his deficiency in size by his speed and aggressiveness. He does the kicking for the team, and is very dangerous when near the goal. The team as a whole is not as heavy as the average, but plays together well.

There are many promising men who are seeking positions on the end of the line, among whom are J. Corcoran, Rosnosky, Barry and Ormsby, and Captain Powers when he is not playing quarter. He and J. Corcoran look best for either extremity of the line. At right tackle Brown, a substitute last year, is the leading candidate. Husk is also being tried out there. Jackson has been playing guard the greater part of the season, and has been showing up well, but a man named Gleason, who wasn't out for the team until a week ago, has been tried there, and it looks as if Coach Mathews had a good man in him. Moran is regular man at center. Bello, a veteran of two years, is playing left guard, and should hold that position over other aspirants, as his work has been good. W. Corcoran is playing at tackle and is showing up well.

Captain Mooney plays quarterback most of the time, and is a good general, but shifts to end to allow Powers, who is smaller than himself, to run the team. Both will be available another year.

In the backfield McCloud plays right half and Schiano left. Both are very good players and know how to carry the ball. Braidwell and E. Brown are alternates who play a good game. Buzzell at fullback finds holes in the line of defense, and his consistent ground gaining makes him a very valuable man.

EIGHT CYCLING TEAMS ARE TIED

The 10 teams left in the six-day cycle race in the Boston Arena, are scheduled to take the track at 4 p. m. this afternoon and continue riding until 1 a. m. Eight of the teams finished the first day of riding tied at 229m. 1l. Mitten and Walker, who teamed-up after the race had started, were penalized a lap and they have not yet made it up.

But one of the teams has been unable to keep up with the riders and that is the Scheller-Kokus combination which has covered 227m. 4l.

TRACK MEN START TO TRAIN.

HANOVER, N. H.—Coach Harry Hillman of the Dartmouth track team has started to prepare for the intercollegiate meet to be held at Princeton Nov. 12. After a week or more of tryouts the coach selected the following men for the training table, which was opened Monday: Capt. John W. Noyes '11, C. A. Waterbury '11, A. F. Alden '13, B. B. Lyons '12, W. T. Jones '12, R. E. Palmer '11, S. T. Clark '12, C. A. Hope '11, H. T. Ball '13 and H. T. French '13.

BLUMENTHAL BEATS MASON.

William Blumenthal of New York defeated Allen Mason of Boston 50 to 41 in the opening game of the national amateur three cushion billiard league tournament Monday night. Blumenthal's average was .47, high run 5. Mason's average was .39, high run 5. The world's record run at three-cushion billiards is 14.

HARVARD TIME TRIALS.

The Harvard varsity cross-country candidates are holding a trial race this afternoon for the purpose of selecting the men that will face Yale in their annual run. The trials will be run over the Chestnut Hill course.

TWO-MILE RUN IS FEATURE OF INDOOR CHAMPIONSHIP MEET

J. W. Monument Defeats 1909 Champion in Close Contest—Two New Records Are Made.

CONTINUES TONIGHT

NEW YORK—The final events in the junior and senior indoor national athletic championships will be contested tonight in Madison Square Garden and some high-class performances are expected. Part of the events were run off Monday night and some great racing was witnessed.

The feature event of the evening was the two-mile run which was won by J. W. Monument of the I. A. A. C., in one of the greatest finishes witnessed here in some time. In this event were Tom Collins, Monument, Noble and Malone.

Collins set a fast pace from the start, but at the one mile and a lap, Monument began to make his presence felt, and at about 300 yards from home he drew away like a 100-yard man and beat Collins to the turn with a bit over a lap to go, winning by five yards.

Two new records were made when Walsh, New York A. C., raised the "56" for height work to 16ft. 2 3-16in., displacing the former best record of McDonald of 16ft. ⅞in., and when Platt Adams, New York A. C., added two inches to Sheridan's pole vault for distance work of 28ft., getting out 28ft. 2in. and beating Hoppening of Montreal by 2¼ inches.

The New York A. C. team showed a point total of 48 for the evening, while the I. A. A. C. tallied 34 as the result of their efforts. The Pastime A. RATIONAL GOLF

By JASON ROGERS

Now that discussion is rife about the legality or illegality of certain clubs used in playing golf, it is interesting to recall the form and make of the clubs which were in use so recently as 25 years ago, writes G. G. Smith in the London Globe. It is quite safe to say that if a player had turned up, say, at the autumn meeting of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club with a set of clubs of the most orthodox modern pattern he would have been the recipient of a good deal of chaff. The greatest change that has taken place in the shape of wooden clubs is, of course, in their heads, which are now broad and squat as compared with the long and narrow shapes made by Forgan, McEwan, Old Tom Morris and other makers of the period. The modern driver is about as like one of the creations of these artificers of the last generation as a bulldog is like a grayhound, or a modern ironclad like an old frigate. There can be no doubt that the old clubs were the more graceful in appearance. Their shafts, too, were also much lighter, and were made of a variety of woods, such as lemon, greenheart, lancewood and hickory.

Modern shafts are made almost exclusively of the latter wood, just as the modern heads are now made of persimmon or dogwood, instead of beech or apple, as they used to be. The shafts of modern clubs are much thicker and not so finely tapered, and they are in consequence much stiffer than the old play clubs. The suppleness or "give" in the old shafts occurred three or four inches above the whipping—the old clubs always had their heads spliced on to their shafts—but in the modern club, if the shaft has any give at all, it is much further up. As a rule, however, it is more easily distributed throughout the shaft. The old clubs were made for the swinging blow, whereas the modern weapons are adapted more for hitting, and the suppleness has therefore given place to "steeliness." The shafts of iron clubs remain about the same stiffness, but their heads have also undergone the same shortening as the wooden clubs.

Another great change has been the deepening of the faces of all wooded clubs. The old clubs had usually very narrow faces, those of drivers and putters, including the horn, rarely exceeding an inch in depth, and the faces of spoons almost invariably measured a little less. The rubber cored ball is much more resilient than the "gutty," and flattens more on the club face. It therefore requires a deeper faced club, but the deepening of club faces began some years before the advent of the American ball. This was probably due to the great alteration in the fairway of courses. In the old days it was the rarest exception to get a ball really sitting up as it usually does nowadays anywhere on the fairway of the course. Usually it was lying cupped in, or, if not cupped, lying very close to the hard ground. The luxuriant, beautifully-groomed herbage of the modern course was unknown; even the putting greens were so bare and unkempt that the caddie's common direction for putting was "Through that hole, sir." The old narrow-faced drivers and spoons were much more efficacious for getting down to these close-lying balls than the deeper-faced weapons which supplanted them. With them if a ball is lying very close on short turf it is not easy, and often impossible, to get down far enough so as to hit it with the center of the club-face.

In the old days there few makers, and as the clubs were all hand-made, one could always tell at a glance by whom a club was made. Each maker had a style of his own which was unmistakable. In these days of machine-made clubs one has first to look at the name, and even that is not conclusive, since a great many "makers" merely put their names on the manufactures of others. One other interesting change of fashion may be noted, and that is in the color of club heads. In the old days it was comparatively rare to see anything but a light-colored head, so much so that it was the custom to regard a dark head with suspicion. The old heads were more fragile, having less wood in their composition than the modern ones, and the gutty was much harder than the rubber-core. The canny Scots reflected that good wine needs no bush, and so when the club maker offered them a dark head they were apt to suspect that its color was a cloak for some imperfection in the grain or quality of the wood. The usual stain was simply a coat of varnish, and the proper color, after age had mellowed it, was the rich amber attained by old violins. Whether the secret of the varnish has been lost or not, one never sees it now, and as a matter of fact, most wooden clubs are now stained dark. Probably the chipping of irons in the confinement of the modern bag is bad for clubs of fair complexion.

CHARLES EVANS BACK OF WESTERN COLLEGE GOLF

Chances of Intercollegiate Association Along Lines of Eastern One Now Seem Very Good.

CHICAGO—The young golfers in this vicinity are now taking much interest in the proposed organization of a western intercollegiate golf championship. Charles Evans, Jr., of Northwestern University and western open champion, has started communication with golfers in the western universities and hopes soon to make arrangements whereby he will get a representative gathering which will have authority to go ahead with the work of organization.

The project has been discussed for a number of years but has never before been so near realization as it is now. Evans has received considerable encouragement so far and is confident he will have the plans well enough matured to hold a tournament next spring.

The main difficulty is to get the golfers together once for the purpose of organizing. After that the remainder will be comparatively easy, as it will not be hard to get players to compete, once the tournament date is announced.

Chicago, Northwestern, Michigan and Minnesota are depended upon to furnish players for competition. There are also players at a number of other schools who would be eligible and there should be a fair sized list for the first event.

It is hoped that the western intercollegiate will be officially recognized and sanctioned by the Western Golf Association the same as the eastern is taken in by the U. S. G. A. The national body furnished the cup for the eastern play, and it is likely the W. G. A. will be willing to put up a prize for the western students.

The tournament would be conducted along the same lines as the eastern, with the individual championship and team play. With the competition once under way, it is likely enough interest will be aroused to get teams from a number of schools.

Among some of the leading western players who are expected to go into the movement are Paul Hunter and Kenneth Lindsay of the University of Chicago, Harry Kimbark, Kenneth Layman and Harold Wyatt of Wisconsin, Philip Stanton of Michigann and Lynn Johnson of Minnesota.

TEARING UP THE COMMON FOR NEW SUBWAY WORK

PICTURE SHOWING WORK NEAR PARK STREET SUBWAY ENTRANCE.
Workmen preparing ground for new Cambridge terminal have fenced off portions and much curiosity is expressed as to what is being done.

Work is progressing rapidly on the Park street terminal of the new Cambridge subway. From the present Park street subway station up across the common toward Beacon street the grounds are in a very much torn-up condition. At Park street portions of the common are fenced off, and much curiosity is expressed by patrons of the road using the present station as to the nature of the work going on.

The work is in charge of Coleman Bros., who have had large experience in construction work of this kind. It is improbable that any trees will be removed, but the common will necessarily remain torn up for some time.

BOSTON HERALD ANNOUNCES NEW MANAGEMENT

The Boston Herald said editorially today:

To the Public: The Boston Herald is one of the institutions of New England.

The owners of the property, of whom Mr. Morton F. Plant of New York is the largest, have believed that the best way to make this publication worthy of its present opportunity would be to invite the community to cooperate with them in maintaining a strictly high-class newspaper.

With this in view, the owners have relinquished control of the property by conferring their voting power upon this board of trustees: Richard Olney, Henry Lee Higginson, John H. Holmes, Robert M. Burnett, Henry S. Howe.

These men can make no profit out of the enterprise. Their consent to serve has been secured only by an appeal to their civic pride. They are willing the public should have the guarantee which their names carry that the Herald will be clean, wholesome and progressive.

They have made Robert Lincoln O'Brien, long identified with Boston journalism, its editor, and John Wells Farley its counsel and treasurer.

The Herald possesses a magnificent plant. It is adequately financed. The newspaper will not be made uselessly voluminous, either weekdays or Sundays, the intelligent public preferring conciseness and accuracy to mere bulkiness. The word is "to go forward," not by resorting to sensational methods or needless experimentation, but by supporting in the interests of the public safe, sane and progressive policies, without regard to their origin.

NEW SCHOOLHOUSE OPENS.

The new William Lloyd Garrison schoolhouse on Hutchings street, Roxbury, was opened Monday for the accommodation of one class from Roxbury high school and five elementary classes, made up of pupils from the Lewis, Oliver Wendell Holmes and George Putnam districts in that part of the Roxbury-Dorchester section of the city.

Put an End to Floor Destruction

If you were to put a dozen different kinds of casters, including "FELTOID," on as many pianos and then have these pianos moved side by side over a hardwood floor, there would be one trail you could not follow—the "FELTOID." They—not the floor—receive the impact.

Put an end to needless floor destruction. Equip your furniture with the genuine "FELTOID." No faith necessary—your money back if you want it.

"FELTOID"
CASTERS and TIPS

See that your next furniture is equipped with them—Your dealer should charge you nothing extra. Insist upon having the "FELTOID." The smooth satin like finish endures while leather hardens; rubber soon wears away; vulcanized cotton and fibre are harder than the floor. "FELTOID" Casters and Tips never harden, never scratch, never mar, never stain—and last as long as the furniture itself. Look for the name "FELTOID" stamped on every wheel and tip. If your dealer can't supply you, mention his name when writing for free copy of "FELTOID" booklet. bills were brought to him he would veto it again.

The Governor read a list of labor bills that he had signed, first stating the purport of the bill and invariably ending with "I signed the bill."

He closed his address with a statement to the effect that at the conference of Governors at Washington all the measures advocated by those executives from the South and West were measures that had been adopted by Massachusetts.

Among the many indorsements of Governor Draper and his administration is one issued today by Charles A. Locke of Locke, Tolman & Co., leather dealers, Boston. Mr. Locke says:

"At this time would it not be wise to consider the coming election for Governor in a calm and unprejudiced manner. Governor Draper has filled the office with much more ability, from a business standpoint, and with as much dignity as any of his predecessors. His appointments have been excellent, and while the writer usually votes the Democratic ticket he will with great pleasure cast his vote this year for Governor Draper, knowing that although in many ways he cannot agree with him he feels that he has been fearless and absolutely honest and that every act of his has been made with only one end in view, and that the honor and welfare of the commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Senator Lodge received a warm ovation at a Republican rally at Melrose Monday night where he talked on the tariff and the high cost of living.

Former Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., also declared that the tariff is not the cause of high prices during his address to a gathering of Republicans at a rally in Malden Monday night.

At a Democratic rally in Springfield Monday night Mr. Foss came out openly for an income tax, declaring that such a system of taxation is justifiable, that it is not class legislation and that it will remove a considerable burden from the shoulders of many who can not afford to pay a tax.

John R. Crook, formerly a Republican candidate for alderman, has issued a statement favoring the election of Congressman Andrew J. Peters, Democrat, rather than W. Dudley Cotton, Jr., on the ground that Mr. Cotton's chief issue appears to be that Mr. Peters voted independently on the Cannon question.

Mayor John F. Fitzgerald of Boston, James H. Vahey, Charles J. Martel, candidate for secretary of state, and Thomas C. Thacher of Yarmouth, candidate for Congress, were the chief speakers at Democratic rallies in Attleboro, North Attleboro, North Easton and Mansfield Monday night.

Mayor Fitzgerald urged the defeat of Senator Lodge, saying that in other states men responsible for the tariff had been retired from public office.

William H. O'Brien of Boston, Democratic candidate for Congress in the sixth district, spoke before a gathering of United Shoe Machinery Company employees of Beverly late Monday. With him was Charles D. Smith of Gloucester, who is running for district attorney of the Essex county district. Later they held rallies in Gloucester, Newburyport and Amesbury.

The tariff's effect on the cost of living was the theme of Congressman Andrew J. Peters' speech at Tremont hall, Roxbury, Monday night. He said in part:

"This country exports 1000 times as much ham and bacon as it imports and about 500 times as much beef and mutton.

"There is absolutely no need of any tariff on meat products and there is no reason why we should not buy our meat much cheaper if that tariff were removed, allowing foreign beef to come into competition with the meat trust, which would then have to come down to reasonable prices.

"There are 71 per cent more cattle in this country now than in 1900. Prices ought to have fallen with this enormous increase in production."

James H. Vahey declares, relative to questions put to him by Franz H. Krebs, a Boston lawyer, in a letter published Monday that the questions would be answered before election day, and adds that he has no time to prepare an open letter of rejoinder.

"As for Mr. Krebs' statement that if I do not answer he will conclude I dare not," says Mr. Vahey, "I will only say he is at liberty to draw any conclusions he wishes."

Late Campaign Expenses

Representative Robert M. Washburn of Worcester has filed with the secretary of state a statement that his renomination to the House of Representatives cost him $375.56.

Louis B. F. Raycroft of Dennisport, an independent Republican candidate for the House in the second Barnstable district, states that his nomination cost nothing, except as follows: "I promised every citizen of the second Barnstable district, with whom I have talked, as a member of a committee of the whole, that if I am elected I shall vote against Senator Lodge, fight for direct nominations, be an active representative of the district's best interests every day during the term of office, and other promises of like import. These promises I consider of great value and as parts of a binding contract between the voters and myself."

CZAR APPROVES LIBERAL ACTION TOWARD JEWS

ST. PETERSBURG—The Jewish "pale" was enlarged today when Emperor Nicholas approving a resolution adopted by the cabinet opened up new sections for the residence of Jews.

Heretofore legal residence of Jews has been restricted to that section of the Polish province and the Ukraine delimited by the original Jewish segregation law and known as the "Pale."

From time to time exceptions have been made in the case of scholars and Jews engaged in certain professions and trades.

Recently a campaign was made to drive back within the Pale all Jews who were unable to establish a legal right of residence outside its confines.

Imperial consent is now given to unrestricted residence of Jews in 12 districts in the provinces of Vitebsk, Volhyria, Mohilav, Poltava and Kherson, and the town of Yokaterinodar, the capital of Kuban.

The places affected are suburbs of towns within which Jews have already been permitted to live.

The action of the cabinet resulted from petitions of the inhabitants of the newly opened localities who desired the admission of Jewish residents as a means of improving local business conditions.

as to the reasonableness and fairness of charges made and services afforded by those who serve the general public, including particularly the so-called public service corporations.

"You ask me to state the difference between a court and a commission and to explain why a court is better for the trial of controversies.

"If this question were asked by an inquiring statesman from Siam, or from some other oriental nation, desirous of understanding why Anglo-Saxons believe in the separation of the judicial and executive departments of government, I should consider it a natural question. But has all the experience of our fathers been so far forgotten that it is necessary for me to elaborately justify to the people of Connecticut a preference to be tried before a court of justice rather than before an administrative commission?

"It would be absurd for a business man like myself to attempt to make in a few letters an adequate defense of settled principles of civil liberty and American constitutional law. But I can see, as I think other business men can, that a commission sits and acts as a branch of the executive power, and therefore must be free from many wholesome restraints against arbitrariness and injustice with which the law has surrounded judicial activities.

"I know also that the life training of our judges peculiarly fits them to weigh evidence, to analyze a complex mass of facts and to apply logically and justly to the relevant facts, the rules of law and right reason properly controlling the issues of the controversy.

"I feel, moreover, in common with other men of sober thought, that our judges are peculiarly protected by the traditions of their high office and by constitutional guarantees in the independent, single-minded administration of justice."

MEDFORD AFTER SUNDAY TRAINS ON BRANCH ROAD

Residents of Medford are signing a petition to the Boston & Maine railroad to have trains run over the Medford branch of the Portland division on Sundays. About 10 or 12 years ago, owing to the small number of passengers on the Medford branch, the management discontinued running Sunday trains. Medford, however, has grown rapidly since then.

Mayor Brewer has been in communication with Frank Barr, general manager of the Boston & Maine, and he has requested City Solicitor E. E. Elder to take charge of the matter on behalf of the Medford people.

business to look after—the development of Boston harbor.

The engineer officers are Brig.-Gens. Henry L. Abbot of Cambridge, Charles R. Suter of Brookline, Samuel M. Mansfield of 231 Beacon street, Boston, and Clinton B. Sears of Newton Center. General Abbot is the father of Col. Frederic V. Abbot, local army engineer. Generals Suter and Mansfield, when they were in active service, were in charge of the local army engineer office.

Another argument advanced for the development of Boston's waterfront is based on the fact that New England merchants are now more than ever going into the market for government supplies.

Today Maj. Robert H. Rolfe, local depot quartermaster, opens bids for furnishing the army with cloth, a contract which will entail an expenditure of about $700,000. On Thursday he will open bids for over $500.600 worth of shoes and other supplies, bringing the figures for the two days' bidding to $1,266,105.

Philadelphia is said to be cutting into this market. The raw material is bought in the New England market. The goods are shipped from Boston to mills to be made up into uniforms. Quick water transportation would be an asset in competing with Philadelphia. New England manufacturers are watching closely the invasion of Pennsylvania and Missouri firms into the army supply market. Should New England lose the contracts to furnish army supplies it would mean tens of millions of dollars annually cut off commercial Massachusetts.

COMPANIES UNITE TO OPPOSE GROSS REVENUE STATUTE

GUTHRIE, Okla. — The American, Wells-Fargo and United States Express Companies have united in an attack upon the Oklahoma gross revenue law in the filing of suits simultaneously in the United States Circuit Court here.

The companies assert that they cannot apportion their business exactly to Oklahoma and that the gross revenue act is an interference with interstate commerce.

The United States and American companies say that each has about 1300 miles of business in Oklahoma and the Wells-Fargo has 1325 miles. The United States company gives its total earnings last year as $17,800,000 and the Wells-Fargo company estimate is $27,000,000.

Two strings of 14 shots each were fired and averaged 50 per cent hits.

Crews from company A, Boston, had the first chance with Quartermaster R. W. Cochrane as pointer for the first string of seven shots anl Gunner's Mate C. A. Mann the sight-setter. Quartermaster Cochrane made an execellent record, averaging 3.16 hits per gun per minute on seven shots with four hits. Gunner's Mate Mann averaged 2.31 hits per gun per minute and had seven shots with four hits.

Plans are under way to carry on the annual target practise in the future during the annual cruise, when all hands will have a chance to drill daily with the pieces.

President Bernard J. Rothwell of the Boston Chamber of Commerce said today that although he had not yet read the articles of the agreement reached on the demurrage question at the Washington conference with the interstate commerce commission, he was satisfied that any settlement agreed upon with the consent of Mr. Ives would be satisfactory to the chamber and to New England shippers.

James A. McKibben, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, says: "It is interesting to note that at the very time when announcement is made of a substantial victory for New England shippers in a hard-fought contest with the railroads before the interstate commerce commission, on the demurrage rules, announcement is also made of an important concession by the Boston & Maine railroad to the chamber without the slightest controversy.

"The road has just made, as the result of studies of our committee on metropolitan improvements, very valuable changes in the receiving of freight at its freight houses. A saving to the shipper of nearly a mile in hauling his freight is effected by the completion and opening of two new freight houses at Minot street, just across the Charles river dam in East Cambridge. Here the road will receive freight which formerly had to be taken to the Rutherford avenue or Warren bridge houses.

"The Chamber believes that this increase and rearrangement of the Boston & Maine's facilities for receiving freight, made by the railroad with the greatest willingness and expression of a desire to improve conditions, shows their intention to cooperate in every way possible with the business interests."

William Gillette in "Sherlock Holmes."

One of the finest examples of adroit playwriting is William Gillette's "Sherlock Holmes," and the author-actor's stage creation of the great detective was so forceful as to permanently visualize the highly interesting fictional character drawn by Conan Doyle.

The performance of "Sherlock Holmes" Monday evening was in every way the delight that it has always been in Mr. Gillette's expert hands. His performance of the masterful, quiet and really mysterious sleuth deserves mention among the leading character creations of the modern stage. At this time it is almost sufficient to say that the performance seemed flawless. The cast:

Sherlock Holmes	William Gillette
Dr. Watson	Clifford Bruce
Benjamin Forman	A. Romaine Callender
Billy	John F. Hines
Sir Edward Leighton	Frank Andrews
Count Von Stalburg	Griffith Evans
Professor Moriarty	J. E. Miltern
James Larrabee	William Riley Hatch
Sydney Prince	Albert Parker
Alf Bassick	Franklin Robbins
Craigen	Griffith Evans
Tim Leary	Frank Andrews
Lightfoot McTague	H. A. Morey
John	Frederick Wallace
Parsons	Edward Lindaley
Alice Faulkner	Louise Rutter
Mrs. Faulkner	Margaret Greene
Madge Larrabee	Marion Abbott
Terese	Josephine Brown

The play worked its old thrilling charm over the audience Monday evening, the same charm that kept Mr. Gillette on tour here in the piece year after year, and for over nine months in London. Many of those present must have been familiar with the play, yet the action was followed with interest throughout, and in the tense silences of suspense that Mr. Gillette contrives so ingeniously there was always the tribute of breathlessness in the auditorium.

From the very beginning, when the plot is unfolded by the conference of the baffled conspirators against Alice Faulkner, there is suspense culminating in the entrance of Holmes. The successful ruse by which Holmes locates the papers in the first act, the comic by-play with nimble Billy and obtuse Watson in the second act, followed by the episode of the interview with Moriarty, and ending in the defeat of the arch rascal in an ingeniously unexpected way, lead up to the big thrill of the piece when the criminals think they have trapped Holmes in the underground chamber, only to have him slip from their fingers by as vividly effective a trick as ever a melodrama contained. With the plotters ready to pounce upon him from every side, Holmes raises a chair high above his head, smashes the lamp, eludes his captors in the darkness and escapes with Alice. The last act is not without its milder excitements to enable the action to taper off in tenseness to its sentimental closing tableau of Alice in Holmes' arms.

Throughout Mr. Gillette was the embodiment of cool resourcefulness that he has impressed upon the character. All his typical little suspenses and whimsical humorous touches were in full play to give pleasure to his audience, which filled every seat. All the clever effects of stage action, noises and lighting came off accurately. Apparently not a point missed fire, and "Sherlock Holmes" bristles with points.

Mr. Miltern was a sinister and very strong Moriarty, and Mr. Hatch gave the heavy yet suave racality of Larrabee due weight. Miss Rutter was pathetically sweet as the much afflicted heroine, and the amiable Miss Marion Abbott showed her versatility by her convincing performance of the adventuress Madge. All the other parts showed careful selection and rehearsal.

"Sherlock Holmes" is a masterpiece of its kind; a delightful entertainment, for it is about equally compounded of thrills and fun. The play is given every evening this week, and at the Saturday matinee. "Secret Service" will be played next week, and "The Private Secretary" during the week of Nov. 14.

Lew Fields' New Entertainment.

"The Summer Widowers," a "musical panorama in seven views," book by Glen MacDonough, tunes by A. Baldwin Sloan, appeared at the Shubert theater on Monday night.

In this spectacular musical concoction Lew Fields has again demonstrated his leadership in this line of production, for "The Summer Widowers" may be classed with "The Midnight Sons" and "The Jolly Bachelors." It is built on a big scale and some of its elaborate effects could not be realized on a vaudeville stage, yet the piece is mainly a vaudeville entertainment, glorified. Swiftly and bewilderingly it flashes its variegated scenes, its whirling dances, its dash of comic antics, through three hours of entertainment.

The boardwalk at Atlantic City is the setting for the first scene, and the first act closes with a realistic moving picture effect of bathers in a high surf. This act also shows a delicatessen shop with animated eggs, sausages and cheese. The big scene travesties life in New York. It is the elaborate staging of an entire apartment house. Several floors are shown, each with a separate set of tenants. And the various incidents in the different households amused the audience highly. A picturesue roof garden is the closing scene, and it serves to introduce, among other specialties, the excellent dancing of the "Hess Sisters," the "Hyde Troop" and the "Eight Berlin Madcaps."

The frail plot is totally submerged in a froth of hilarity and is hardly discoverable after the first scene. But the piece is made somewhat cohesive by the humorous delineations of a flaxen-haired German Hebrew by Lew Fields. He is funniest in the delicatessen shop. Here he dispenses queer edibles in a manner to keep the audience constantly laughing.

Miss Irene Franklin as a lady detective scored a hit with her slang song "Miss Dennett," in which she relates the troubles of a waitress. Her famous "Reg Hod" song received many encores. Miss Ada Lewis pleased in a travesty of a flirtatious widow with a mischievous little boy played cleverly by the diminutive Will Archie. Miss Alice Dovey was petite and winsome and rendered several songs pleasingly. "The Calcium Moon" with novel scenic effects was her best number. "Flying High" with its four miniature aeroplanes floating out over the audience was the best novelty in the singing acts.

Willis P. Sweatnam, a most excellent negro comedian, was given brief opportunity to display his talents as the janitor. Fritz Williams, another excellent comedian, has a part below his talents. Vernon Castle danced agilely. An unusually large supporting company is employed.

The resourceful Mr. Wayburn has devised several concerted numbers that are ingeniously lighted, beautifully costumed and which go with dash and vim. The large audience gave ample proof that it thoroughly enjoyed this new product of the play shop of Mr. Fields.

Castle Square Theater.

The John Craig players at the Castle Square appeared Monday in Charles Rann Kennedy's five-act drama, "The Servant in the House." The play is well known through its performances here two seasons ago at the Tremont. Many persons have commended it highly for the spiritual nature of the theme, as set forth in its picture of the coming of a man of spiritual exaltation into the midst of a group of persons of varying degrees of selfishness.

The newcomer, known as the Bishop of Benares, brings a message of counsel and comfort to all except a high church personage, who is treated in a manner hardly consistent with conventional ideas of Christian gentleness and forgiveness, and in the end is driven from the house, giving the impression of physical and mental superiority, rather than spiritual elevation. However, this is consistent with the author's often expressed code of belief. This, together with several elements that would seem to push the them a bit too far, especially that which imitates accepted portraits of the Nazarene in the facial make-up of the Bishop of Benares, resolve themselves into questions of taste.

Moving, the play is, to a great degree. The ethical elements in the action affect the audience strongly, and they often impart a thrill that is close to religious awe. Mr. Craig enacted the central character with dignity and power, keeping the part human and gracious at all times. Donald Meek found a good acting part in the crafty Bishop of Lancashire, who appears to have been drawn with ill-concealed malice by the author, representing as it does a church body with which he appears to have no sympathy. Miss Mary Young played the child part of the drain man's daughter ingenuiously and her father was vigorously impersonated by GeorgeHassell. The others were adequate, and the audience gave evidence of enjoying the serious and comic episodes heastily.

"Ihre Familie."

A well-acted German version of "Caste" was given at Jordan hall Monday evening by the Boston amateurs, who, under the name of the Deutsche Theater Gesellschaft, have favored this city for several seasons with a number of well-selected German plays.

The play tells the story of a naval officer of noble birth who marries a poor dancer, who is, nevertheless, his equal in qualities of mind and heart. The young man's mother, the proud Countess von Ebersburg, renounces her son because of his mesalliance. His wife and mother both mourn his supposed loss, but his unexpected return reconciles all parties.

Friedrich Metzger played the part of Georg von Ebersburg with dignity, while Miss Pauline Vatter as the wife left nothing to be desired in her acting and appearance.

Ernst Kunstler played the part of the ne'er-do-well father with a quiet humor that often verged on the pathetic. A trio of fun makers were also Paul Boettcher, Leo Robinson and Miss Marie Monpiton. Josephine Christensen as the haughty countess had distinction.

B. F. Keiths—Vaudeville.

Knute Erickson, the eccentric comedian who was so amusing when "At the Waldorf" was played at Keiths last season, is the star comedian of "On the Housetop," a one-act musical play with elaborate settings and filled with fun. Mr. Erickson has a lot of new comic "business" and his every appearance is a signal for laughter, which continues while he is in view.

Miss Charlotte Hunt, well known for her performances in stock in Boston, offers a gay little play called "Love Under Difficulties" which gratified her admirers greatly. The Cycling Brunettes proved their mastery of the bicycle by performing several feats of a startling nature.

Williams and Segal danced nimbly, as did Rooney and Bent, who also sang several bright ditties. Wenrich and Connolly pleased with their ballad singing. The Avon comedy four offered a funny schoolroom sketch. Moving pictures of the championship baseball games were shown.

Plays that Held Over.

The tuneful and funny operetta from England, "The Arcadians," is in the last two weeks of its engagement at the Colonial. Miss Julia Sanderson, Alan Mudie, Frank Moulan, Percival Knight and Miss Connie Ediss head one of the best casts of the season.

"The Chocolate Soldier" continues at the Majestic to entertain its hearers with the graceful music and pleasant fun of the opera made out of Shaw's "Arms and the Man." It is the music, as played by the enlarged orchestra, that is noteworthy.

"Seven Days," the farce at the Park theater, is repeating for its heartily laughing audiences the effect of the piece in New York, where it ran a solid year. The company is that which was in the farce during the New York run, and they are experts.

"The Fortune Hunter" continues its indefinite engagement at the Tremont. Mr. Smith's funny play is meeting with a success well deserved by his originality in getting away from the conventional in rural plays.

"The Family," at the Globe, is interesting because of the exceptional talent of the leading players, for John Westley, Sam Edwards, Miss Julie Herne and the others are all artists with the history of fine performances behind them.

"The Speckled Band," the new Sherlock Holmes drama which Boston saw for the first time last Monday evening, is filling the Boston theater, for a good melodrama is among the best of entertaiments. Edwin Stevens and Charles Millward head a fine cast.

Announcements.

Miss Ellen Terry will present the first of two illustrative discourses next Friday evening in Tremont Temple. "Shakespeare's Heroines" is the title.

Mrs. Jessie Eldridge Southwick will read "The Merchant of Venice" next Saturday evening in Chickering hall, instead of Friday, upon which are given the recitals in the current Southwick course of classic and modern comedy.

At the Castle Square next week John Craig will produce Shakespeare's tragedy, "Richard III."

Mr. Newman's next travel talk in Tremont Temple, Saturday afternoon, will have for its title "Turkey Under the New Regime."

"The Port of Missing Men" is next week's attraction at the Grand Opera house.

AT NEW YORK THEATERS.

Charles Klein's "The Gamblers" was offered Monday evening at the Maxine Elliott theater. The drama, which was described at length in this paper on the occasion of its recent production in Chicago, deals with a plot used often in "society" plays. To put it politely, the plot is concerned with the elimination of a superfluous husband, always made desirable in proving the case for the lovers. The situation is familiar in such dramas as Young's "Jim the Penman," Fitch's "The Climbers" and "The Cowboy and the Lady," and Carton's "Lady Huntworth's Experiment." "The Gamblers" is filled with incidents of social and business piracy. The husband is presented in the double role of avenger of his private as well as the public wrong, for besides being a sympathetic friend of the wife the leading man is a violator of the national banking laws. The audience's approval is directed towards this law breaker. The cast includes George Nash, Charles Stevenson, Miss Jane Cowl, William B. Mack and Miss Edith Barker.

When "The Blue Bird" is moved from the New theater to the Majestic on Nov. 7, the latter house will be reestablished as a first-class theater. The stage of the Majestic is said to be amply large for the production, and it is promised that there will be no difference in the performance. Matinees will be given on Thursdays and well as Wednesdays and Saturdays, beginning at 2 o'clock. [illegible] the New theater the regular [illegible] season will begin on Nov. 7, with a production of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," to be followed Nov. 12 by the first performance here of Pinero's "The Thunderbolt."

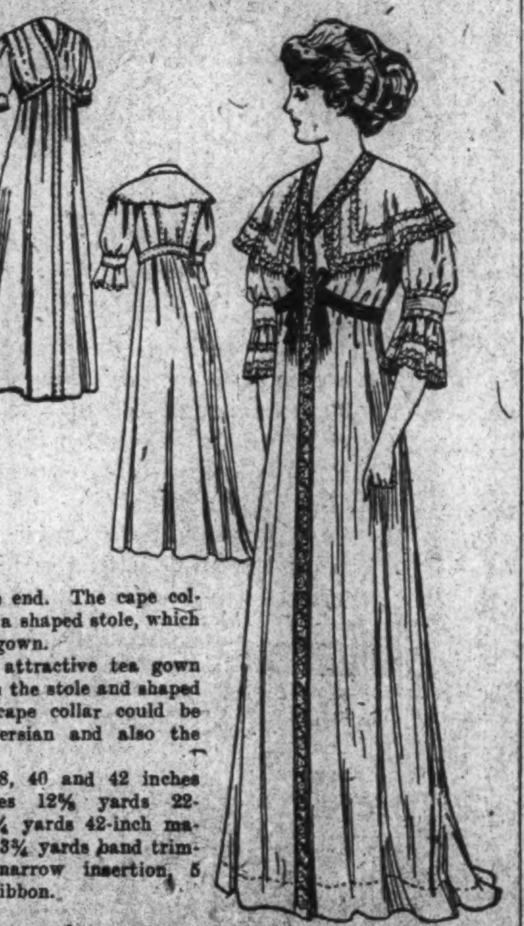
FASHIONS AND THE HOUSEHOLD

PRETTY EMPIRE TEA-GOWN

With or without a cape collar.



THE illustration shows a very pretty empire tea-gown, made from Ladies Home Journal pattern No. 5445, which could be worn with or without the cape collar. The skirt part is cut in four pieces, closing in the front and having a seam at the center-back, in short sweep length, perforated for floor length and joined to the waist by a shaped band.

The waist is cut in three pieces, with three tucks on each side of the front, stitched to yoke depth, and the four tucks in the back stitched to the belt.

The sleeves are quite full, gathered into a straight band, with a slightly shaped ruffle on the end. The cape collar is joined to the waist by a shaped stole, which runs to the bottom of the gown.

[illegible] would make a very attractive tea gown [illegible] pink messaline, with the stole and shaped [illegible] of Persian satin. The cape collar could be [illegible] with a band of the Persian and also the [illegible] ruffles.

[illegible] only in sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 12⅝ yards 22-inch, 5⅝ yards 36-inch or 6¾ yards 42-inch material without up and down, 3¾ yards band trimming, one 10-yard piece of narrow insertion, 5 yards edging and 3 yards ribbon.

New and Charming Color Combinations

ONE of the newest combinations is that of mauve satin veiled in coral colored chiffon or gauze. Can you picture that union? Naturally, your mind rejects it as impossible, a warring of reds, but when you try it you will discover a distinctly new color that is gratifying to the eye and most becoming to a brunette. Another favorite combination is that of royal blue or empire green over the new Persian gold cloth, the latter having the stiffness that distinguishes the regular cloth of gold, plus the changing lights in variegated colors that are found in Persian rugs or fabrics.

Of beaded nets there is no end, and embroidered marquisettes with patterns worked out in jet or steel beads are new and very lovely. It seems like piling Ossa on Pelion to veil those marvelously beautiful satins that are brocaded in velvet, or those rich moires, charmeuse or [illegible], but the effect is simply dazzling when a tunic of chiffon cloth or marquisette, heavily studded with steel or crystal beads, is added over them. A rare example was a velvet-brocaded ciel-blue charmeuse veiled in self-color studded in crystal. Bands of pale blue encircled the skirt hem and the elbow sleeves, but otherwise the rich effect of the veiled fabric was unbroken by bands of trimming, the only bit of decoration being a [illegible] gold lace incrusted with turquoise to fill in the decolletage. The [illegible] Japanese sash, was of wide, self-colored plain velvet, tied permanently in back with a big bow and long ends.

[illegible] combination of blue and purple [illegible], at first thought, to be incongruous, but it much used this autumn, especially in millinery, a marine blue that has a silvery touch to it, rather like moonlight on the bay, being a favorite. Also purple is seen in combination with burnt orange, or flame color; and apricot with gun metal gray is another effect that is delightful for a reception gown, with the addition of moleskin fur, now revived to favor, or with mouflon. Antique blue with cerise is good, and a beautiful exemplification of this union is shown in a matchless limousine coat of cerise camel's hair lined with old blue satin, and displaying an exaggerated sailor collar or black velvet, Persian embroidery and black fox fur, being brought far down on the shoulder to form the kimono sleeve uppers. This elegant garment closed eccentrically on the left side with three buttons of carved ebony.

A smart idea displayed in the autumn styles is the princess corselet panel. This forms a front piece that makes a plastron on the bodice, narrows in at the waist lines, where it creates a continuout part of the corselet, and widens out again to form the dado band on the lower edge of the skirt, pointed on its upper edge in high vandykes. It is to be understood that this is made all in one piece, forming a circular band at the foot of the skirt, and the best result is achieved when it is made of firm material, such as velvet, or brocade or tinsel cloth.—Vogue.

Meat's Food Value.

A great deal of the extravagance in the use of meat may be traced to the popular belief that there is no nourishment in meat from which part or all of the juice has been extracted. We are frequently told in books which are otherwise reliable that corned beef, for example, has no value as food, and that there is no nutriment in soup meat. While it is quite probable that a good flavor helps with the digestion of food, and it is certainly true that it helps to tempt appetites, it is entirely wrong to suppose that in the case of meat this flavor must necessarily be from the meat itself. A piece of meat from which the juices have been extracted may have a high food value, and by means of the judicious use of flavorings it may often be made into a palatable dish.

Narrow Hem

In making a narrow hem, as in napkins, you first turn the hem as wanted; then turn it back along the edge to be sewed and sew by hand. When finished take the thumbnail and run along the sewing on the right side. The stitches are almost invisible. The work is neatness itself and in half the time required otherwise.

CLOTHES OF COUNTRY WOMAN

Yearly getting easier for her to dress well.

EVERY woman who has any experience of rural life in the United States realizes that it is a much more difficult matter for the countrywoman to appear well dressed than for her city sister, yet each succeeding year sees her making fresh progress in this direction. Women everywhere are fully awakened to the duty of looking well, and men are also imbued with a new desire to allow their wives and daughters the means of "looking like other people." There is a much more generous ideal of this in rural homes than formerly.

It is easier, too, for the countrywoman to dress well since the great improvement in the paper pattern, the saner purpose of the fashion magazine, and the conscientious and purposeful improvement in the ready-made garment.

There is also much more attention paid to good taste, a thing which was sorely needed and is still sorely needed in the education of all women whether in town or country. It is not the object of the really tasteful woman to keep quite at the height of the fashion: it is her object to dress quietly and well, and to make the most of her looks both at home and abroad, because it is pleasanter for her and her family for her to do so.

There is a certain spiritual grace that comes from looking neat and attractive in one's clothes. The farmer's wife who has smoothed and arranged her hair, pinned her collar neatly and put on a nicely made dress, no matter of what cheap material so it is restful to the eye and carries lines of symmetry, actually sets her mood in order for the day, and distils from herself the essence of cheerfulness for her family.

As for the Sunday gown there are many popular materials and pretty designs that lend themselves to the uses of the country-woman. Nothing is more comfortable to wear and less easily damaged by weather or mussing than a foulard silk chosen with care as to color and figure. The foulard silk is easy to press and clean and nearly always bears remodeling. There are also many soft woolen stuffs which, if chosen wisely, make pretty and durable costumes, says a writer in the Ladies Home Journal.

The one-piece gown is the joy of the woman who must dress in a hurry. She can get into it while she is thinking about the buttons and collar of the separate waist; and, though the separate waist and skirt have a place in a woman's wardrobe which they will always hold, no woman who has worn a one-piece gown can fail to be sensible of its comfort and convenience.

The subject of colors is one which women need lecturing on. Bad choice of colors is the most fatal blow to good dressing among people of moderate means. We have to learn that bright colors, daring combinations, new shades and "quaint conceits" may be successfully used only in very expensive fabrics combined by expert dressmakers, and even then the question of actual taste remains open.

The home dressmaker, the woman buying inexpensive garments ready made, should choose quiet colors and inoffensive combinations. Whenever you get tired of these and feel an impulse to purchase something more elaborate or brilliant, remember it is safer to keep to the quieter shades and the standard materials.

While black is always a safe color, it is not an especially desirable one for the church and visiting gown of the country woman because of its tendency to show dust and mud stains. Browns and grays have a great advantage here, as have also good mixed checks.

The subject of economy in dress is also one in which many women need instruction. We need to learn to discriminate in the actual values of fabrics, and while we lament the "shoddy" tendencies of all manufactured stuff, let us remember that we pay now for a good piece of silk or wool just the price our grandmothers paid. If the calico or the gingham gown does not wear nor hold its color so well as formerly, bear in mind that we do not pay as much for it by half as we did 30 years or more ago. All this has come about, no doubt, through the demands of frequent changing of fashion.

BATHROOM FLOOR AND WALLS

Sash curtains on windows the most serviceable.

A QUESTION that interests and perplexes many of us is what to do to the walls and floor of the bathroom. Every one likes to see this room well appointed, fresh and spotless; but this last is not always easy of accomplishment, says an exchange. Were tiles and mosaics to be had for the wishing, we might all do well, for where the entire room is tiled it is a simple matter enough to keep it in order; but reality is apt to offer most of us floors with the paint marred and stained, or the hard finish scratched and spotted. Hardwood floors in bathrooms need constant attention; if finished light they show every mark and grow dingy long before we are willing to do them over; or if dark the stain is soon worn away or destroyed by continual splashing of water. One solution of this problem, which has appealed to some as practical as well as good looking, is the use of a plain tone, fine quality of linoleum; it may be washed clean with the least possible trouble, and once washed it looks clean. On the walls enamel cloth presents the same appearance of perpetual cleanliness, as offending spots are quickly removed.

There is really no excuse for ignoring the attractive possibilities of the bathroom. The first and most essential element is, of course, freshness: still there are other elements as well. There must be suitable furnishings, which should be selected with the same careful thought that is brought to bear on the other rooms of the house. On the floor there ought to be a generous-sized rug of a color either in keeping with the tone of the room itself, or if that has no special color the rug should reflect that of the bedroom out of which the bathroom opens. The bathmat, which should always hang on the side of the tub, looks best when selected to go in color with the rug; these cotton rugs wash if care is taken to get a good quality, and are inexpensive enough to replace when they become permanently dingy. Sash curtains are the most serviceable at the windows, although it is also proper to have the simple kind hanging from a rod at the top of the window to just below the sill. Plain white muslin is the best material for this purpose, although small figures or cross-bars of color are also appropriate.

When it is possible, the woodwork should be white. A shelf over the sink is a necessity in order to keep the array of neatly labeled bottles, which we all find so convenient, away from the inevitable splashing of water. This shelf may be of thick beveled glass, or plain wood painted to match the trim. Every bathroom should have rustless nickel hooks on the door, not for towels (which should hang on a bar for that purpose) but for the temporary convenience of underclothes and bathrobe. Each bathroom should likewise have a plain straight chair—a painted kitchen chair, rather than anything elaborate or wearing the look of having been cast, because of its delipidation, from some other room.

Exquisite Buckles

The buckles for decorating evening slippers are exquisite this season. Cut steel seems to be the leading material and many very beautiful designs are to be seen in this refined-looking metal. The buckles are large and oblong. Other sizes and metals are available, according to the choice of the wearer. Some women like a tiny ornament set in the rosette of tulle or ribbon, while others prefer a plain flat ribbon drawn through a fairly large handsome button. Next to steel, rhinestone buckles are favored.

Fancy Baskets

Fancy baskets in colors can be cleaned with water the same as any basket, but the colors are less liable to run if cold water and naphtha soap are used. Lined baskets can be cleaned in this manner.

TRIED RECIPES

CRAB SOUP.

Melt one tablespoon of butter, add a grated onion, a teaspoonful of minced parsley and one tablespoonful of flour. Add slowly one quart of milk and stir until smooth. Add one cup of cooked crab meat, one cup of boiling cream, a pinch of powdered mace; salt and pepper to season and two hard-boiled eggs chopped fine. Simmer for five minutes and serve.

ORANGE CAKE.

One cup sugar, three tablespoonfuls butter, two eggs, half cup orange juice, grated rind of one orange, 1½ cups flour, 1½ teaspoonfuls baking powder. Cream butter, add sugar, beat; add eggs unbeaten; beat thoroughly; add orange juice, then the flour sifted with the baking powder. Bake in gem pans and roll in powdered sugar warm.

KISSES.

The secret of good kisses lies in the beating. Beat the whites of two eggs to stiff froth, then add two cupfuls of granulated sugar and one teaspoonful of vinegar. Beat well for 20 minutes. Turn your baking pan upside down and cover with oiled paper. Drop the mixture in teaspoonfuls on the pan. In baking they swell quite a bit. Do not turn the light on the oven until they are on. Then bake slowly 25 minutes. This quantity makes two dozen.

HOT WATER CAKE.

Four eggs, separate them, beat yolks light, gradually stirring in two cupfuls of granulated sugar. Beat well together, add one cupful of boiling water, two cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder. Beat whites to a froth and flavor. This makes a good, large, three layer cake. Bake slowly.

BAKED APPLE PUDDING.

Line a small bake sheet with good, rich biscuit dough, fill nearly full with sliced apples, put in one cup of sugar, large piece of butter in dots, any kind of spices; bake one hour in slow oven.

HOME HELPS

WHEN making toast you will improve it by laying the slices of bread in the open oven for a little while before putting them over the coals or in the toaster. They will toast better and more evenly for this advance treatment.

When using the whites of eggs only in the preparation of a dish, slide the yolks into a bowl without breaking them and put cold water on them. They will then keep for several days, and may be used in cooking as well as if they came from just broken shells.

A souffle should never be put into a very hot oven. It crusts over on top before it has time to bake properly inside, and is likely to fall as soon as it comes from the oven. Bake in a moderate temperature and not too fast.

* * *

To prevent jams and jellies from graining add a teaspoonful of cream of tartar to every gallon.

Always shrink a new braid before sewing to a skirt; otherwise the bottom of the skirt will become puckered the first time of wearing in a shower of rain.

Floors which are to be stained should be prepared first by painting with a very thin coating of size evenly applied.

The Hat Flower

The flower that is placed upon the under brim may be one of the features of the hat. If it is chosen with a view to bringing about an effective contrast, besides introducing a becoming color note, if it is large, soft and loose-petaled, placed flat against the brim and at just the particular spot where it will heighten the beauty of line and not detract from it, the picturesque and decorative effect of such a flower can hardly be overestimated.

A DELICIOUS DESSERT

will often redeem a poor dinner because it is the last course that people remember.

A dessert deliciously flavored with

The Age of Platinum

Platinum is the most ductile of the precious metals. It has now double the value of fine gold, and its soft white luster added to its great tensile strength makes it a perfect material for the mounting of gems. It gives the diamond its finest display; sapphires and pearls set in delicately pierced and lacey effects, appeal to the most discriminating taste.

The undersigned deal extensively in Precious Stones displayed in most artistic settings.

MADE-UP MUFF AND NECKPIECE

Small bits of fur cleverly put together.

EVEN the most insignificant bits of fur can be made into a charming muff and neckpiece by following the ideas put forward by some of the smartest French makers. One that I recall, says a writer in the Montreal Star, is a collarette and muff of fur combined with silk brocade, the pattern of which is outlined in silver soutache, the colors of the design being very brilliant blues and reds woven into a whole of great richness. By picking up a suitable remnant of brocade in the upholstery department and embroidering it in this fashion one can devise a set of this kind at very small expenditure. Both pieces are lined in satin to match the coloring of the brocade. For the muff will be required three bands of fur, say 2½ inches wide, and two bands of the silk seven inches wide. The shape is a flat pillow muff, the bands of course running round it. The neck piece is a straight band about 3½ inches wide with fur at the top and bottom, brocade in the middle, and tabs of the brocade turning back on each side of the front, held by large silver lace buttons. If it is too great a labor to embroider the brocade as I have indicated, the muff can be made effectively by using tucked chiffon in its place, or a soft satin corded will answer.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LEADING FEATURE OF STOCK MARKET

Price Movements Somewhat Uneven, Traders Showing Disposition to Take Profits on All Rallies.

LOCALS IRREGULAR

Canadian Pacific soared upward again today. It opened up strong within a fraction of the highest it has ever reached. The record price was established in December, 1906, when it sold at 201½. Its opening price today was 201, a gain of 1⅛ over last night's closing. This stock has merit back of it as the company has been doing a remarkable business, each month's earnings showing a great expansion over the corresponding month of the year previous, but the activity and buoyancy in the stock is largely due to the expectation that an extra distribution will be made to stockholders in the near future from land sales.

The opening and early sales of the New York market manifested considerable irregularity. There was some display of strength at first but traders soon took profits and the tone was decidedly unsteady. Bethlehem Steel and General Electric were strong.

The only disturbing cause discussed among traders is the political one. There was no London market today.

The local market was somewhat erratic. United Fruit was weak and some strength was displayed by such stocks as American Telephone and Old Dominion. Telephone has been making a steady advance lately, due principally to the increased earnings of the company.

Canadian Pacific continued its advance during the session, selling above 200, its best record price. The rest of the market was very narrow. There was a recession followed by a recovery but fluctuations were for the most part unimportant. Soo again made a bid for prominence. It opened unchanged at 139½ and rose 2 points during the first half of the session. Wisconsin Central accompanied it upward. It opened off ¾ at 58 and sold above 60. Chesapeake opened at 82¼ and rose ½ before noon.

General Electric opened up a point at 155 and improved a good fraction. Amalgamated Copper opened up ¼ at 69⅜ and crossed 70. The market leaders moved within fractional range.

On the local exchange United Fruit opened off ¾ at 181¼, sold off to 180½ and recovered fractionally. North Butte attracted some attention. It opened unchanged at 33½ and gained over a point before midday. American Telephone & Telegraph opened up ¼ at 141 and improved fractionally. Calumet & Arizona opened off a point at 56 and then recovered most of the loss.

During the afternoon Hocking Valley which opened up 6 points at 131 jumped to 139. On the local market Calumet & Arizona sold down to 52⅜, a decline of over 3 points from the high of the forenoon, and then rallied somewhat. Boston & Providence opened up 6 points at 296 and advanced a point. Rutland preferred opened up 2⅝ at 42⅝ and improved nearly 2 points further.

PAYING OFF A TEMPORARY LOAN

City Treasurer Slattery is today paying off a portion of the temporary loans negotiated last May, June and July at 3½ per cent in anticipation of the payment of taxes.

Notes falling due today call for the payment of $1,950,000. The temporary borrowings this year were unusually small, aggregating $4,100,000, which compared with $5,000,000 last year, $6,400,000 in 1908 and $10,000,000 in 1907.

The temporary borrowings of the city this year were made as follows, comparison being made with 1909:

1910 Mon.	Amt.	P.C.	1909 Mon.	Amt.	P.C.
May..	$1,000,000	3½	March..	$800,000	2¾
June..	3,050,000	3½	April....	2,000,000	2¾
July..	50,000	3½	July....	1,000,000	2⅝
			Aug....	1,000,000	3
			Sept....	1,000,000	3¼
			Sept....	1,000,000	3¼

The remainder of the temporary loans, amounting to $2,150,000, will be paid off in the next few days from city collector's receipts on account of 1910 taxes payable Nov. 1.

STANDING OF BOSTON BANKS

Average Legal Reserve Slightly Higher and Average Actual Reserve Nearly One Per Cent Lower.

The individual reserve standing of local national banks, members of the Boston clearing house, at present and a week ago, is presented in the table given below. In addition to the legal reserve carried here and in New York (one half may stand in the form of deposits with the New York correspondent banks), we compute what may be called actual reserve at present, as indicated by the excess reserve in New York. The excess of deposits with New York reserve agents over the amount which may be counted as half legal reserve is here counted part of reserves instead of simply an offset to deposit liabilities, as is done in figuring legal reserves.

The excess or actual reserve over 25 per cent denotes the amount which might be deducted from the total reserves in both cities, Boston and New York, and still leave the legal reserve intact.

No reserve is computed against government deposits. The table follows:

	Legal Oct. 29.	Legal Oct. 22.	Actual. Oct. 29.
Union	26.8%	25.7%	27.2%
Old Boston	25.7	26.7	28.2
State	26.2	25.5	29.2
New England	26.7	27.0	27.3
Atlantic	25.7	25.7	25.8

Winthrop	25.0	24.6	25.5
Commercial	27.2	26.1	28.4
Average	27.2%	26.8%	28.3%

Average legal reserve is 4 per cent higher and average actual reserve is 9 per cent lower than a week ago. Eleven of the 17 banks are stronger than last week in legal reserve and six in actual reserve. No bank is below the 25 per cent legal reserve, against one below last week.

In the corresponding week of 1909 average legal reserve was 26.1 per cent, and average actual reserve 27.3 per cent. Four banks were below the 25 per cent legal reserve.

TO APPRAISE PEOPLE'S GAS

CHICAGO—A complete appraisal of all the properties of the People's Gas Light & Coke Company will be included in the investigation of the gas rates under the direction of the city council committee on gas, oil and electric light.

Preliminary plans covering the nature of the information desired by the committee were discussed and it was explained later that the company's officials agreed to give all information necessary to determine the actual cost of producing gas.

OCTOBER WAS A GOOD MONTH IN THE SHOE TRADE

All Lines Participate in Renewed Activity and Business at Present Is Considered Satisfactory.

LEATHER SITUATION

From the shoemakers come reports more encouraging than has been the case for many months. During the month of October 115 merchants from the West and South visited this great shoe center. These buyers, in a sense, represented the commercial wants of several thousand retailers. They came here to place contracts for the future, and inquiry reveals the truth of that statement.

It was learned that many fair-sized orders were taken and a few large ones, forming in the aggregate a total beyond the expectations of the uninitiated. The conclusion is, therefore, that trading in these commodities is well up to former years and that the statement that business has already improved is justified. It is not necessary to specialize any line of goods as being the recipient of the favors of these buyers, for it was learned that all lines from the child's cacks to the men's long-legged boot were contracted for. This is proved again by the appearance of the factory buyer in the leather market.

At no time for years has there been so little leather on hand in the factories as is the case now, therefore, any fair-sized volume of orders sends the leather buyer to the source of supply and his presence was quite noticeable the past week.

Samples for 1911 are now to be seen and the shoemakers' art is there manifested. The noticeable changes are the absence of the freak lasts rather than the introduction of any radical styles. Colors will be found in all lines from the cheapest to highest grades, and velvet uppers will occupy a prominent place in the medium and cheaper lines. High heels, so much in favor for a year past, will be seen in all the lines for ladies, as their popularity does not seem to wane. The men's shoes will also have the high heel, though confined to the more stylish grades.

Trading in sole and upper leather has become active, and reports from the district are of a satisfactory character. Liberal contracts for "hemlock sole" were taken the past week, which has made the tanners less anxious about the warehouse stocks, and many are preparing to increase the output.

Union sole is going freely. One sale of 20,000 backs will show a condition quite convincing that the shoe trade is feeling the effect of better times throughout the country. Oak sole is also on the move, the makers of fine footwear having been in receipt of orders from their salesmen now on the road seeking contracts for spring and summer.

This class of manufacturers is also calling for calf skins in box, gun metal and patent finish. The free buying has made the market short of certain goods. Side leather finishes have been so much improved upon that most of the men's shoemakers use it to a large extent, resulting in keeping the market in no condition to act favorably to demands for quick delivery.

Splits for shoe tops are no longer a dead asset, the heavy grade meeting with daily sales, but light splits are not dealt in unless low prices are mentioned. The orders given for ladies vici kid shoes during October started that branch of the leather trade into a condition resembling by-gone days, and a goodly number of contracts were closed at prices a little more advantageous to the factory buyer than he has been accustomed to in the past.

Looking at the situation in a most conservative manner it is plain that a much better market exists and that the leather merchants feel that prices will advance when stock from recently purchased hides reaches the distributing point.

Foreign buying of finished leather continues and indications are that it will change from a semi-annual to a steady demand. Salesmen seeking the wholesale trade are leaving daily with samples for fall and winter of 1911.

It is gratifying to note that legitimate business no longer cringes before political strife.

NEGOTIATIONS TO BE CLOSED FOR HEAVY PIG IRON TONNAGE

PITTSBURG—Indications are that negotiations will be closed in a few days for between 10,000 and 25,000 tons of gray forge, malleable, bessemer, foundry and basic pig iron. Bids on these tonnages have gone in, and consumers are ready to close. It has been fairly well established that present prices cannot be shaded. With the execution of a few odd lots of foundry iron, there has been no trading in this market during the past few days.

Two or three of the large steel companies in this section report that specifications against running contracts for semi-finished steel during the month of October have been heavier than last month, which showed a healthy gain over August. The volume of new business, however, has been comparatively light, and the decreased tonnage on books has resulted in production being curtailed somewhat during the past week.

Users are not buying very far ahead, and prices are not very firm. Odd lots of Bessemer billets have been sold last week at $23.50, makers mill, Pittsburg, and while some mills will not quote that figure, it is doubtful whether any business is being placed at a higher price. Bessemer and open-hearth sheet bars are quotable at $25, makers' mill, Pittsburg. Active negotiations, it is stated, have lately been started for several large blocks of steel cars and prospects are that there will be resumption of car buying on a good scale much earlier than has of late been anticipated. The Pennsylvania railroad has been conducting the most active negotiations, and it is considered probable that that company will place important orders within the next few weeks. As a forerunner to such contracts, the Pennsylvania has given orders to its own shops at Altoona to build 500 cars and work is about to be started on this job.

IOWA FARM LANDS DECREASE, VALUATION LARGELY INCREASES

Remarkable Changes Shown in Agricultural Statistics of the State in the Past Decade by Census Returns — Comparative Summary.

WASHINGTON—The census bureau's first preliminary comparative statement concerning the general farm data derived from the recent census of agriculture, as a part of the thirteenth decennial census, was issued by Census Director Durand today. It relates to the state of Iowa and contains principally the results of the census bureau's tabulation of the number of all farms and farms of specified classes, and also gives the acreage and value of farm land in the state in 1910 in comparison with the twelfth census figures. It was prepared under the supervision of Chief Statistician Le Grand Powers, of the division of agriculture. It is stated that the tabulation totals, while tentative in character, will not be appreciably changed by later revisions.

Similar statements concerning the other states are being prepared, and early issuances of those for Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota and Wisconsin may be expected. Following these there will be others showing the same facts for the individual counties within each state. Statistics relative to the acreage and yield of crops, and the number of domestic animals on farms and ranges will be next in order.

These advance statements form another of the important innovations instituted by Director Durand in order to give the public the earliest possible use of the census data, and they antedate, by more than six months' time, the customary publication of these data in bulletin form at previous censuses.

Comparisons between the 1910 and 1900 totals for Iowa show many remarkable changes. While there have been noticeable decreases since 1900 in the total number of farms, farmers, owners, part owners, total acreage, improved acreage, etc., on the other hand those are greatly overshadowed by extraordinary increases in the value of land, buildings and implements, and in the expenditures for labor, which range from 51 to 122.7 per cent.

From 1900 to 1910, according to Director Durand's statement, the total value of Iowa's farm land alone rose from $1,256,752,000 to $2,799,025,000, an increase of $1,542,273,000, or no less than 122.7 per cent; the value of all farms, including that of their buildings, increased from $1,497,555,000 to $3,253,719,000, a gain of $1,756,164,000, or 117.3 per cent; and the value of the buildings alone rose from $240,803,000 to $454,694,000, an increase of $213,891,000, or 88.8 per cent. The value of farm implements and machinery rose from $57,961,000 to $95,273,000, a gain of $37,312,000, or 64.4 per cent; and expenditures for labor from $16,376,000 to $24,732,000, an increase of $8,356,000 or 51 per cent.

It is expected that later data will show that the number of people employed on the Iowa farms did not increase, therefore the reported increase in the total expenditures for labor represents approximately the relative increase in the wages of the individual farm laborer.

The total number of farms dropped, during the decade, from 228,622, to 216,807, a decrease of 11,815, or a trifle over 5 per cent. This falling off in the number of farms is one that has been anticipated by all students of agricultural conditions in Iowa, and is believed to correspond quite closely with an anticipated decrease in the rural population of the state.

The number of farms operated by white farmers decreased from 228,395 to 216,603, the amount being 11,792, or 5.2 per cent; while the diminution in the number of colored farmers was from 227 to 204.

The number of farms cultivated by their owners fell from 116,188 to 105,698, a decrease of 10,490, or 9 per cent. Those cultivated by part owners decreased from 28,988 to 26,531, the difference being 2457, or 8.5 per cent; while those reported as being cultivated by a partnership of owners and tenants decreased from 2129 to 621, a loss of 1508, or 70.8 per cent.

The farms operated by tenants increased from 79,736 to 82,039, a gain of 2303, or 2.9 per cent. There was also an increase amounting to 21.3 per cent in the number of farms operated by hired managers. In 1900 there were 1581 such farms, while in 1910 the number is 1818.

The farm acreage reported in 1910 is 33,905,000, as compared with 34,574,000 in 1900, a decrease of 669,000 acres, or 1.9 per cent. This decrease, in the opinion of the census bureau, probably represents a less perfect enumeration of land in the several townships owned by people residing in other townships, due to the change in the census date from June 1 to April 15. Much of this land is in pastures and meadows, and intended for lease, but, at the date of the enumeration in April, it had not been leased for 1910 and was therefore unoccupied and unreported.

The improved acreage of farms also decreased, but in smaller proportions than the total acreage. The improved land reported in 1910 numbered 29,467,000 acres, while in 1900 the acreage reported was 29,898,000; the decrease amounting to 1.4 per cent.

The expenditure for fertilizers in Iowa has never been very large, and was smaller in 1910 than at the census of 1900, decreasing from $337,000 in 1900 to $107,000 in 1910, a drop of 68.2 per cent. The census in 1910 secured information for the first time relating to the amount expended by the farmers for the purchase of feed for live stock, which was $18,575,000.

Of the 216,807 farms in Iowa, there were 108,034, or nearly one half, on which all the work of cultivating them was performed by their owners; while the number reporting the expenditures for labor, as stated above, was 108,773. The majority of the farms purchased no feed for live stock; the number that made such purchases was 81,269 and the number that expended money for fertilizers only 1746.

The land reported in farms constitutes 94.7 per cent of the area recorded by the government surveyors of the state. The variation between the surveyed area and the land reported in farms is quite uniform for nearly all the counties; the farm land reported being in most counties between 2 and 6 per cent less than the surveyed area.

Mme. Sembrich in Symphony Hall Matinee

The soprano presents German songs. Singing account shows large balance in her favor. Scant results of interpretation.

THERE can be no nonsense about a song program that is all Schubert, Schumann and Brahms.

The only mischance possible about it is that it may be a little too serious.

Take a volume of the song works of each of these composers, pick out six or eight pieces from each volume and read the poetry.

Go through it in the German, if you happen to have a reading acquaintance with that language; or if you have not, put your mind on the thought of the different poets as it is presented in the translation.

You find yourself luxuriating in sight and tears; breathing an atmosphere heavy with a fragrant melancholy; you are thrown into a mood that you were never conscious of when reading any English lyric poets, either the greater or the lesser luminaries.

Now play over on your piano, if you are a player, or let somebody play for you the music which Schubert, Schumann and Brahms conceived as a tonal paraphrase of the words.

You find that your mood, acted upon by melody, modulation and rhythm, is charged with three additional pressures of the spirit of dreamy longing.

If you are a German yourself, it will all be different; for you will know how to take your poets, whether Heine and Gothe among major lights or Muller and Eichendorff among minor; and you will not let the witchery of the music beguile you into an exaggerated state of sentimentality.

But if you are not German, if you understand the subtleties of Goethe's and Heine's lyric vocabulary only as the educators have let you see them, you will find a study of your Schubert, Schumann and Brahms selection of songs will take you both poetically and musically into a realm of emotion where you sorely need a guide.

Happily, guides enough are ready to show you about the wonderful region, guides who will lead you out of lyric bewilderment into the daylight.

How will you decide which one to take out of so many?

Here is one, an American, has studied in Germany. He will vocalize that music for you according to the most approved methods; he will trim the singing just enough to give declamation its due. He will intepret that combined work of poet and composer so you will understand it as it was meant to be understood.

You try him today and another day you try another like him, and you keep on trying.

Baritone, tenor, soprano; American, Russian, German, too; you let nobody go by who will show you the interesting points in the song country of Schubert, Schumann and Brahms.

Sometimes you think you have hit upon a very knowing guide; at other times you think you would have done as well if you had explored alone.

And on a certain day along comes a Wullner.

You make yourself one of his party, and when he is done with you feel that you had never set foot in the land of German song before that day.

The only possible lack in your pleasure is on the musical side.

You feel that you have a clarified notion of German lyricism that no secondary member of the interpreting fraternity can ever muddle.

But you will not be contented with the Wullnerian survey; you saw well what you did see, but it was only half. Goethe and Heine, yes, as you never understood them before; Schubert, however, and Schumann, no; something desirable in their case left out.

A Sembrich holds out a promise of the one thing your search has failed hitherto to yield.

What credentials are here!

They say Mme. Sembrich is the greatest soprano artist of her generation.

Will she not, then, disclose to us the meaning of the song writers' music?

She is taking the thing seriously, you see.

Schubert, Schumann and Brahms; a strictly German expedition.

Let us follow her, remembering that it is music this time, not poetry; the vocal idea of our composer, not the imagery of the poet, that we wish to become acquainted with.

And at the end of our excursion under the lead of Mme. Sembrich, what have we to say?

We say that we had great delight in the singing; that we saw the beauties of the song country we hoped to see—hill and dale, slanting sunlight and violet shadow—the scene that melody in its freest expression evokes.

And yet we did not come through so cleansed in spirit as we expected.

We felt the lack of the poetry more than we believed we should.

We were thrown back on our own imperfect conception of Heine's and Ruckert's verbal symbols; or rather we could not hold out against the singer's imperfect conception of them.

The luxuriant melancholy again, and the oppressive lyric fragrance.

We did not reach the heights at all; we were given a comprehensive view, but from a distance and from an unexalted level.

Mme. Sembrich's recital of Monday, the first Symphony hall matinee of the season, was attended by a large audience. The singer's accompaniments were played by Frank La Forge. The program:

Fruehlingsglaube, Der Fischer, Fruehlingssehnsucht, Dass sie hier gewesen, An eine Quelle, Du bist die Ruh, Ungeduld, Schubert; Im wunderschoenen Monat Mai, Aus meinen Thraenen spriessen, Die Rose, die Lilie, Wenn ich in deine Augen seh, Ich will meine Seele tauchen, Er ist's, Die Lotosblume, Er, der herrlichste von Allen, Schneegloeckchen, Der Sandmann, Fruehlingsnacht, Schumann; Es liebt sich so lieblich im Lenze, Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer, Botschaft, Schoen war, das ich dir weihte, Das Maedchen spricht, Vorschneller Schwur, Brahms.

Editorial Comment

THE selected editorial comments today deal with the speech of Senator Cummins of Iowa in Chicago:

CHICAGO RECORD-HERALD—The speech of Senator Cummins in this city was certainly "regular" enough to satisfy the most hardened standpatter. The senator virtually declared that the most reactionary Republican, if "honest" in his beliefs, should be preferred by voters to the most level-headed and progressive Democrat; and he asserted in so many words that he would rather suffer the mistakes of the Payne-Aldrich tariff for a thousand years than the disaster of a tariff for revenue for a single month.

CHICAGO INTER OCEAN — Senator Cummins of Iowa, at Orchestra hall, closed a long denunciation of some Republican legislation and of the Republicans who enacted it—with what? With an eager appeal, almost pathetic in its fear, that all Republican candidates be elected anyhow! With a tremulous appeal to his hearers to believe, despite all the crimes with which he had charged the Republicans and their party and all his indignant disavowals of their sins, that the Republicans should be nevertheless continued in power!

MILWAUKEE FREE PRESS — The spectacle of Senator Cummins invoking the spell of party regularity in behalf of the voter after having kicked that same regularity up hill and down dale in Congress and in the primaries is somewhat difficult to focus. This journal has no more use for hidebound regularity in politics than it has for trip-hammer insurgence. But if a partisan chooses to be the one or the other, it at least expects him to be consistent.

BURLINGTON (Vt.) FREE PRESS—The great host of Republican insurgents are taking a position similar to that of Senator Cummins of the Hawkeye state. To be sure one hears of not a few Republicans in all parts of the country who are not satisfied, but as a matter of fact there are as many Democrats who will vote the Republican ticket as there are Republicans who will not vote straight.

CONCORD (N. H.) MONITOR—The managers of the Democratic campaign in New Hampshire appear to be desirous of securing wide circulation for the opinions as to the tariff of Senator Cummins of Iowa. We hope they will not overlook in this connection the speech which he made in Chicago.

JANESVILLE (Wis.) GAZETTE—Senator Cummins of Iowa has long been recognized as one of the prominent insurgent leaders, and it is not surprising that his speech in Chicago has invited all sorts of comments from the press of the country. In this address he urged the loyal support of all Republican candidates and said, "rather the Payne-Aldrich tariff for 1000 years than the success of the Democratic party."

JEWS GAIN POINT IN RUSSIA

BOSTON OPERA ARTISTS ARE READY FOR DUTY

Mme. Lipkowska, Light Soprano, and Mme. Carmen-Melis, Dramatic Soprano, and Others Arrive.

Mme. Lipkowska, the leading soprano of the Boston opera house, and others of Henry Russell's prominent singers, some of them members of last year's company, others of them new comers, reported Monday night for the winter's work.

The party arrived in New York by the steamship New Amsterdam and came directly to Boston to the Hotel Lenox.

In the party were: Mme. Carmen Melis and Miss Fely Dereyne, sopranos; Mmes Celina Bonheur and Czaplinska, mezzo sopranos; Mme. Lucette Lievin, soubrette; Leo Devaux, tenor; George Baklanoff, baritone; and Mr. Sibiriakoff, the new Russian bass who is to appear in "Mefistofele."

Mme. Lipkowska and her associates, according to the practise of opera singers who come to our shores, have put only the time of an ocean voyage and a few days of preliminary rehearsal between their European and American seasons.

Mme. Lipkowska will resume the position she took in last year's performances at the Boston opera house. Any principal soprano role that calls for coloratura execution will fall to her and any opera that depends for its success in light soprano singing will remain a longer or shorter time in the repertory according to whether Mme. Lipkowska makes it popular or not.

To Mme. Carmen Melis will fall the work that last year was regularly assigned to Mme Boninsegna. Most of the operas in which Mme. Melis will appear have an assured place in the repertory, and her task, unlike that of Mme. Lipkowska, will be to live up to the traditions of the roles to which she is appointed.

MME. LYDIA LIPKOWSKA.
Coloratura singer who has the chief part in works of the old school of Italian and French opera.

We shall let Mme. Lipkowska give us her interpretation of "Lucia," "Lakme" and "Traviata" and choose which we prefer to hear her in again. We shall ask Mme. Melis to interpret for us "Tosca" and other modern works and expect her to make them what we think they should be, conceding little or nothing to her own preferences.

Block signals have been installed by the Boston Elevated company on Blue Hill avenue, where there is a long grade, in order to keep the cars at least 500 feet apart.

It is very unusual to instal a block system over a public street, unless the line is single tracked, but the grade at this point made the measure desirable.

THE HOME FORUM

AN ENGLISH COMMON

A COMMON, preserving many of the homely, yet pleasing features of old-fashioned rural England, extends from the bank of a small Norfolk river. To look down into the valley from some oak-shaded knoll of its bordering uplands is to see a little tract of country presenting the same aspect that it wore a hundred, perhaps two hundred, years ago. At the upper end of the valley, a tract of heathland, densely covered with bell-heather and ling, reproduces in miniature some familiar features of larger waste lands. About midway down the valley a belt of bracken divides the heath from the pasture-land of the common—a natural pasture where large and ancient bramble thickets and furze bushes are constantly encroaching upon the grassy tracts and upon certain circuitous tracks and footpaths which form a kind of maze the children love to explore. Lower still, where the valley widens out toward the marshlands bordering the river, the pasture gives place to the "wet common," where few ridges of sparsely grassed [illegible] separate numerous peaty hollows [illegible]-fringed pools. The water in [illegible] pools is clear but peat-stained. It [illegible] like a mirror, and to come to the [illegible] a pool after nightfall is to stand [illegible] on the edge of an abyss, the [illegible] which are filled with stars. [illegible] the natural features of the [illegible] on a writer in the London Globe, and the homes of the valley folk are quite in harmony with them. There is no regularity about them; no two stand close together or are quite alike; and they are dotted about the pasture land and along the verge of the heath and the wet common in a picturesque, careless way, as though the builder of each had consulted only his own taste and fancy. Yet although no two are alike, nearly all are built of "wattle and daub," the only brickwork about them being the fireplaces and chimneys. No tile nor chimney-pot is to be seen in the valley, every roof being of thatch, and every chimney a square block of bricks rising a few feet above it. Quite one half of the cottages have, as their occupiers say, "no upstairs," and a tall man, standing on the doorstep, can easily touch the low-hanging eaves. Each stands within a hedged or wood-railed garden, and some are so surrounded by gnarled old apple-trees as to be almost concealed by them.

There are women still living on the common who used the "flint-and-steel" to get a light with in their early days, and who, on winter evenings, have sewed by the feeble light of rush candles of their own making. These folk will point out the "candle rushes" growing in the marshes, and here and there beside the peat doles.

Pounds of Prevention and an Ounce of Score

IN the good old days the score of a football game might run up to 47 to 16 without diminishing the joy of the spectators. When the talk of making over football was rife somebody—probably far from the madding strife of the Yale-Harvard game—put forth some notions that naively expected football to be a game of kicking the ball. It is more interesting to see a good kick with the ball sailing freely through the air than to watch a squirming pile of bodies and waving legs, with the ball somewhere down under it all. To keep down the score seems [illegible] the thing, however, not to [illegible] object of playing games. [illegible] bystander [illegible] is to prevent the other fellows from playing. [illegible] of prevention are in [illegible] [illegible] Such pounds of [illegible] hardly worth an ounce of score. [illegible] of late—perhaps with the new rules it is different—seemed to be almost the concrete example of the old catch: "When an irresistible force comes in contact with an immovable body—what?" A goose egg as the tally for either team—and might one say a rather appropriate symbol?

[illegible] The Mocking Bird

[illegible] Los Angeles [illegible]

What was the song bird telling the world
When [illegible] with its sounds of joy
Had westward marched with banners furled
From the [illegible] of history?
He sat in the [illegible] magnolia tree
While the mists [illegible] the twilight sea,
And sang this evening song to me.

And these were the words I heard
From the throat of the mocking bird:
"I am singing the song my fathers sung
When the sea was here and the hills were young
And the surf leaped up to greet the sun,
Where the corn now waves and the squirrels run.
And the wild seamew and the gray gulls flew
Close up to the feet of the mountains brown,
When the sea was here and the hills were new
Ere the torrents bore their treasures down
To bridge the bay with the fertile lands,
Where the orange groves in gold and white
Now lift their heads in the soft warm light,
And the fields are decked with the fruitful vine
And the lofty eucalyptus stands
Forever green in the traveler's sight—
Where the rose tree blossoms the whole year round
And the hues of heaven new birth have found
In the flowers that shine from the lowly ground."

A Fish in the Hand

At a well known Philadelphia club several sportsmen were swapping fishing yarns, when one man brought up the subject of "greenhorns" at the game. He related the following tale:

"When on a fishing jaunt up in the mountains after trout, I came upon a young man whose appearance told me at a glance that he had never fished before. He was faultlessly attired and was whipping a trout stream, when by some odd chance he got a bite. He had hooked a one pounder by the way the line strained.

"He was not playing the fish at all. With the rod held straight ahead he was [illegible] and steadily reeling in the fish. [illegible] to hold it was beyond [illegible]. Presently the fish was directly below the end of the rod.

"Did he stop? No—he kept on reeling the fish in and just as I reached the water's [illegible] the fish's head touched the tip of the rod. The man even tried [illegible] through the ring. Just then he saw me standing on shore, waving my arms. He turned to me with a bewildered look and said:

"'What shall I do now?'

"'The only thing you can do,' said I, 'is to climb up the pole after him.'"—Philadelphia Times.

The Artificial Sponge

The artificial sponge has recently been manufactured. The process, a German one, consists principally in the action of zinc chloride on pure cellulose. This results in a pasty, viscous mass, which is mixed with coarsely grained rock-salt. Placed in a press-mould armed with pins, the mass is pierced through and through until it appears traversed by a multitude of tiny canals, like the pores of a natural sponge. The excess of salts is subsequently removed by prolonged washing in a weak alcoholic solution. The artificial sponge swells up with water, but hardens on drying, just like its prototype; it is eminently adapted for filtering water for sanitary or industrial uses, and it can be employed for all the purposes that are usually assigned to the genuine article.—Harper's Weekly.

ORCHARD AND WOODLAND

THIS is not a scene in old Japan, though the bloomy cherry trees against the severe green of the firs might first recall the landscape delights of that eastern island country. These are cherry trees as they grow in the west of our own land, where the fruitfulness seems all but fabulous to our more rigorous latitudes. Indeed the latitude is the same, but something, perhaps the warmer Pacific currents, seems to make a difference.

The other picture shows not forests primeval, though these trees may well have been of primeval growth. This is, however, a glimpse into a parkland of the West. At this season when the Thanksgiving memories are so alive for us all, it is interesting to ponder on the forest wilds which covered this vast country when the Pilgrims came, and then on the fruitfulness and beauty that abound where were only the hunting grounds of the Indians. Dispossession of the original owners seems wrong, and there is one more dark blot marking the progress of civilization where the Indians encountered the trained abilities of the white men; yet home and plenty for the many have followed, not from the wrong done the original owners of these lands but in spite of it.

There is no other book which reflects so many sides and aspects of human experience as the Bible, and this fact alone would suffice to give it a world-wide interest and make it popular.—H. Van Dyke in Century.

AMBITION

IN her "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 154) Mrs. Eddy says: "Have no ambition, affection, nor aim apart from holiness." At the outset of his ministry Jesus was tested by proffers of rank, wealth, possessions and personal dominion. He disdained them all, desiring no other dominion than that of good over evil, with the result that his very disciples exclaimed: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!" The tempest obeyed, not the human Jesus, but rather the spirit of Christ, to which Jesus himself yielded glad and constant obedience. It is not to mortals that dominion belongs, but to that spiritual reflection of divine Mind, which it should be our constant endeavor to manifest and bring to light.

The three epochs in the marked career of Nebuchadnezzar are interesting in their logical sequence. The first is that of the mighty king whose realm is vast, whose will is law, and whose word purports to deal out life and death to his subjects. The second gives a picture of the deposed monarch wandering unkempt in the desert, painfully learning a lesson in humility. The third epoch shows him reinstated in his kingdom, mighty once more, but humble, having learned that "those that walk in pride he is able to abase" and that supremacy is purely spiritual. Abraham Lincoln is reported to have reproved the one who said to him "Pray that God be on our side" with the reply "Pray rather that we may be on God's side." So it is with all ambition: it is either spiritual in origin and aim or it is material in origin and aim. The individual whose ambition is personal, mercenary or heartless is bound to fail, for he is fighting up stream against the reality of his own being, and sooner or later divine Principle will redeem him and set his feet in a straight path. This does not mean that it is wrong to succeed in any honorable profession or branch of art, far from it; but rivalry should be carefully excluded and the cultivation of the moral and spiritual nature given first place all along the line. It remains for humanity to prove that man is spiritual.

And how, it is asked, will such an ambition work out for the general good? Will it mean failure in business? Will it involve allowing ourselves to be downtrodden while the unscrupulous succeed? On the contrary, it will inevitably elevate all peoples in proportion as each individual rises in the scale of being. Impractical notions are discarded and the genuine Christian Scientist seeks the support of wisdom and discrimination in his every decision and enterprise. He does not feel called upon to run risks and ignore roguery, but every time error confronts him he remembers the admonition of Jesus: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me," and if he is faithful he mentally upholds the standard of perfection in place of the mortal manifestation of imperfection. If it be wise to speak the word in season, he speaks it; if not, he can at least separate the tares from the wheat and judge righteous judgment. This always entails being willing to deny and reverse the evidence of the physical senses. In Mind's creation, there are no thieving, deceiving ideas and their seeming presence will give way to denial rather than acquiescence. We must hold to the spiritual ideal for our neighbor as well as for ourselves, for that is brotherly love. The writer has many times heard business men who are Christian Scientists say that transactions that would formerly have been considered passable are now rejected as a matter of principle, and they have invariably been rewarded by other and sounder opportunities presenting themselves. The ambition is no longer to outdo our brother, to rival him or plot against him or a neighboring country; it is no longer to go to war but to maintain progressive peace; and now that the Golden Rule, scientifically applied, is proving itself of practical value, others will feel encouraged to shift the basis of their ambition, raise their standard of thinking, and so raise the standard of their business.

It is impossible for one to realize perfection himself while he is believing in a lower standard for his neighbor, for the truth about one is the truth about all. The fact of the spirituality and immortality of man should raise the human standard, leading one to compare "spiritual things with spiritual," rather than measure the merit of one by the demerit of another. It should be one's earnest desire to refrain from all discouraging criticism, in both thought and word, and to be just as careful what we say or think about the man in the street as in what we say or think about ourselves. The individual who attempted to remain selfish and self-centered in his spiritual warfare would make only very slow progress.

Every man, woman and child can today take part in the present establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth by resolutely turning his thoughts again and again toward the spiritual ideal in all things; so doing, his consciousness will be like a window admitting the "Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." In opening up this scientific way to "love thy neighbor as thyself," it is found that the neighbor is, in a sense, a part of ourselves, and we a part of him, humanity being a whole is made up of parts. Individual thinking needs consequently to be corrected at all points, and his own thinking is each one's problem. The spur to progress in this direction is the admission that whatever improves the one improves the many, while what retards the one in a measure retards the many. Jesus Christ worked out his salvation largely by means of what he labored to accomplish for "the multitude," and he presents the perfect example of indefatigable, selfless ambition.

Sound Advice

Time to be happy is now; not in the by-and-by

THAT the cry of "can't make a living" is a great mistake is the idea of the "Country Contributor" to the Ladies Home Journal. She says: "Can't make a living without work" would be nearer the truth, or, perhaps, "Can't make a fortune." If we loved each other in the right way, if we understood life at its best meaning, we should stand shoulder to shoulder with our loved ones and work humbly and gratefully at whatever came to hand, with little thought of riches, sensing the joy of the sunshine and the rain, the sound of beloved voices, the firelight on beloved faces. How terrible it is that we let "things" come between us and this!

Let us try to learn and to teach our children that happiness is not a thing we are to have some time when the mortgage is paid off, or the education finished, or the parlor furnished. If you can't lay hold upon it now, today, you never will, but will just go on chasing the phantom to the end of the chapter. Let us know and realize that we are all, in a sense, doing what we wish to do under the circumstances. We can all think of things we would like to do if things were different; whenever we reach the point where things have got to be different we change them. Meanwhile let us do what we are doing happily, without the grumbling and grunting so common to the human race.

A Costly Catalogue

Mr. Pierpont Morgan's gift to the Guildhall of a catalogue contains reproductions in color of his famous jewels and works of art. It is valued at £1000, which is little to be wondered at, considering that the book has taken four years to complete. Forty-two reproductions of the original are now being made for private circulation. The paintings are being executed by Messrs. Hyatts, in Oxford street.—London Standard.

Asking No Favors

A WOMAN who makes at least $1000 a month in real estate, began as a stenographer, says the Saturday Evening Post.

"From the beginning," she said, "I eschewed men socially. Not once in all my business life have I been seen at luncheon with any business man except my brother. Not even today am I ever seen with a man at a public restaurant. A business woman, if she wants to impress the business world, which means men, must meet them in public in a business way.

"She may show her femininity in her clothes and in her voice, but she must not let it otherwise appear between 9 and 5, even in such a superficial way as lunching. She must avoid the atmosphere of invitation. I consider that attention to this detail has been one of the chief factors of my success.

"I had a dressmaker who bought my clothes without bothering me about it, and a milliner who sent me out my hats, and a housekeeper who made my home. I insisted on looking feminine, but I was just as free from domestic, nagging things as a man, and just as independent. When the day came that I was offered a salary of $10,000 a year I was able to refuse it, for I could make more alone, without taking orders from any one. I made my success because I have been just a sheer business mind, determined to win; not because I was a woman, but because I had the mind to do it."

If the show of anything be good for anything, I am sure sincerity is better; for why does any man dissemble, or seem to be that which he is not, but because he thinks it good to have such a quality as he pretends to?—Tillotson.

Why all this deference to Alfred and Scanderbeg and Gustavus? Suppose they were virtuous; did they wear out virtue? As great a stake depends upon your private act today as followed their public and renowned steps. When private men shall act with original views the luster will be transferred from the actions of kings to those of gentlemen.—Emerson.

A Chance for All

A few weeks ago I read about a boy whom I think you would like to know. He went to the city school, and stood well in his class. However, he saw that some of his classmates had a hard time to learn and so were dropping behind the rest. He made up his mind to help these boys, so they would not fail.

Then he saw, too, that some newsboys were unable to go to school at all. He thought he could be of use to these, also. He asked his father if he could help them and also if he could use the barn.

Obtaining permission, he opened an afternoon school and presently his pupils began to come. As his class grew larger, the people in the town began to want to be of use to him in his good work. So they furnished the barn with seats, blackboards and books. Here all through the term he helped the boys with their lessons.—Childrens Star Magazine.

France and M. Briand

EMERGING unharmed from a political crisis that one week ago portended grave results, France is to be congratulated on its capability to weather conditions that, in less aggravated forms even, have frequently been responsible for cabinet changes. The vote of confidence in the Briand ministry established the fact that the railroad strike had to be handled firmly, with due regard to the welfare of the employees and the public. After days of parliamentary debate, the French premier at last found the opportunity to convince the nation that no thought of dictatorship lurked in the background as far as M. Briand was concerned. Few will deny to this official exceptional diplomatic skill in meeting the various issues confronting him since the strike began. His declaration that a revolutionary purpose had been injected into the strike by those hostile to France must have appealed to M. Briand's countrymen as a sufficient reason why repressive measures had to prevail at times.

The French people look expectantly to the future. Will the premier be able to sustain his position and avoid unpleasant encounters? Is he secure enough to handle the labor situation and jeopardize the interests of neither employer nor employee? The Chamber of Deputies has many component parts. Extreme radicalism is striving to make capital of whatever discomfiture may be the lot at times of M. Briand and his associates. The socialism for which the premier stands is proving a normal, ameliorative agency for pacification within the boundaries of the republic. His declaration that the railroad men would not suffer from the delay in the adjustment of their grievances is generally conceded to mean that he will exert his full power before permitting labor to be humiliated.

As a constructionist, M. Briand is one of the most interesting figures on the French political horizon. He has "arrived" in the complete sense of the term. For the first time almost since the days of Pericles doctrines of the kind that distinguish the French premier are being put to the test. The radicals, who for twelve years controlled the politics of the country, did not seem able to settle the intricate labor question. The brilliancy of M. Clemenceau, his undisputed genius as a parliamentarian, the dignity of the acknowledged man of letters, all failed him when it became a question of dealing judiciously with the postal strike. In fact, he was awkward in his handling of the situation.

Where M. Briand and M. Clemenceau are one in sentiment is in relation to the necessity of maintaining a friendly attitude toward Germany. This, in the estimation of these eminent Frenchmen, is entirely feasible without weakening the entente with Russia and England. The foreign policy has nothing to fear from the present cabinet. France believes with the rest of Europe that housecleaning begins at one's own doorsteps before venturing the advice that a similar process is needed elsewhere.

M. Briand began his political activities when the miners of the St. Etienne coal fields in 1902 sent the promising lawyer to Parliament. During the "separation" debates he astonished the Chamber by his logic, his ever-present courtesy and simplicity of speech that was, nevertheless, profoundly impressive. He has succeeded in making the separation law fairly acceptable to those, even, who fought it from inception until it became effective.

"Private or collective interests shall not prevail against national interests." In this one sentence M. Briand puts himself on record. He believes in public ownership of the utilities, but qualifies his belief by saying that absorption must come gradually in order to be beneficial. He has improved decidedly on the former premier's doctrine of state ownership. It is only necessary to examine what he has so far accomplished for his country to learn the quality of M. Briand's patriotism. Undoubtedly, he will strive further toward securing for capital and labor what is due to both.

WIDE interest centers in the announcement of Ernest F. Birmingham that he will begin in New York about Dec. 1 the publication of a daily newspaper in the form of a review. Mr. Birmingham's experience as editor and publisher of the Fourth Estate augurs well for the success of the undertaking. The News-Letter, in the form of a daily digest similar to that furnished monthly by the Review of Reviews, is intended to fill a long felt want and deserves encouragement.

The Special Library

SPECIAL libraries have come to be so numerous and so important that special librarians find it advisable to form themselves into associations, similar to those of general librarians, for the purpose of bringing about a periodical interchange of views and experiences with relation to the work in which they are engaged. The genesis of the special library is secondary in interest only to the present-day development of the idea from which it sprang. First of all, no doubt, there was the pocket stuffed with clippings on special subjects, from newspapers and magazines. Then, probably, the stuffed pigeon-hole. Then, very likely, the more orderly arrangement in envelopes or in scrap books. But the main thing was still lacking.

It is a common saying among newspaper writers that the most valuable information contained in the most valuable book of reference that ever was written or compiled is utterly worthless unless it is at one's hand when it is needed. It will not do to have seen it somewhere the day before; it will not do to be able to find it tomorrow, or even in an hour or two; it is only serviceable if it can be reached now. This would be too extreme if stated with regard to writers for the periodical press or writers of books, or with regard to the still larger class that is now looking to the special library for data of almost every character. It was the application of the index and cross index system to the news and magazine clipping that made the up-to-date special library possible.

The great public libraries were among the first to index newspaper and magazine matter on an extensive scale. In most of them today one may be provided with clippings on any special subject as readily as one may be supplied with volumes from the shelves. Special libraries, however, in which the librarian and his assistant give practically all their attention to the collection and arrangement of newspaper and magazine articles on some particular subject or in some peculiar field are numerous, and, what is still more interesting, establishments engaged in engineering, construction, manufacturing, contracting, etc., are organizing private special libraries, whereof the aim is to collect and have ready for immediate reference all the printed information afloat with regard to the business of the concerns maintaining them.

In some respects this may be looked upon as a further step toward that specialization and centralization which many view with misgivings. The thought is entertained in some quarters that as a result of the specialization tendency we shall have in time classes made up of people who know all that is to be known about some things and nothing about most things. This, however, is the pessimistic side of it. The saner side is that this specialization is only one of many tendencies making for thoroughness and efficiency in all branches of knowledge. The man who knows most about the business in which he is engaged need not for that reason know least about other matters. Knowledge is widening, not narrowing, and the thinker need never, except through wrong thinking, become a mere machine.

Available Water Power

MUCH already has been said and done about preventing monopoly by corporations of water power in the far West, but meanwhile hundreds of old mill properties in the East are rendered useless by neglect. Every one is beginning to realize that the government's action in guarding what belongs to the whole people from spoliation means an admirable display of far-sightedness. What shall be said of individuals or service companies throughout the eastern states who fail to distinguish the tremendous opportunities for constructive work offered at the sites where harnessed water once turned machinery? These promises, side by side with relics of disintegrated industry, plentiful as they are in New England, surely deserve more than passing thought.

Sojourners in the East frequently discover sylvan spots where lie the picturesque ruins of mills that kept up a constant hum thirty or more years ago. Now moss clambers unhindered over inclines and sluice-ways, and placid currents wend their way unchecked through crevices opened by time and viewed by man without concern. Pathos bathes these quiet places in distinctive charm; art records their natural attractions, and their isolation speaks loudly to those who ordinarily recognize no other guide than utility. With the advent of the steam sawmill old methods of handling timber became merged in later schemes. Capital gravitated toward immediate profits and disregarded investments fully as lucrative in their time. Only in the back country towns do we now hear the buzz and whir of the old water-power sawmill, and many small factories in rural districts have quit by force of the march of events.

There is one logical use to which these abandoned water powers may be put, and that is the manufacture of electricity. Demand for light, heat and power makes electricity the leading venture of this age, and the time is approaching rapidly when every available source of production will be acquired by corporations that manufacture and distribute force. The day of the picturesque old water wheel, the dam, the weir and the sluice-way is past, but the places they marked will furnish places again for industrial activities. In view of a great New England railway corporation's announced intention to sell light, heat and power throughout its territory, water-power sites in this section seem already to have potential values that are worth noting.

Montauk or a New England Port

CONSIDERED merely from the standpoint of expediting the business of the United States with Europe, the proposition to make Montauk a deep water port seems one of gigantic possibilities. It would clip 113 miles from the ocean voyage from Europe, replacing a water haul requiring from seven to twelve hours by a rail journey requiring three hours. The advantage of expediting the delivery of mails in New York city and in thousands of interior towns by from four to nine hours need not be explained to any business man doing an international business. The clipping of ocean records by the huge turbine-propelled liners, in the hope of achieving the four-day transatlantic passage, has been done under the impulse of mail carrying competition. Pneumatic tube service might still further abridge the period consumed in mail transmission.

It was a splendid dream, that of Austin Corbin's, to make at Montauk the great deep-water port of America's Atlantic seaboard, though it seemed to his contemporaries iridescent. That it failed of fulfilment in his time was due perhaps to a number of causes, but the idea remained, to become more convincing by reiteration in a day when no triumph of technical skill and daring can safely be said to be impossible.

The feasibility of the great scheme seems to depend, in the last analysis, on the depth of channel actually, not theoretically, available. If the coast at Montauk point dropped off into the sea in a sheer bluff, with fathomless water at its foot, the problem would be a simple one. With the necessity for dredging a part of the undertaking, the latter resolves itself into a struggle with natural conditions.

While the choice of Montauk as an out-port will lead to even greater development of New York as a port, it is a question if this pushing of the railroad lines seaward to meet the incoming and to hasten the outgoing traffic is not the result of an exigency that sooner or later might make use of Boston as a port of entry and departure for the transatlantic passenger and postal service, the steamers continuing on with their freight to New York, whither their passengers and mails will have been whisked by five-hour boat-trains, thus economizing six or seven hours. For reasons of sentiment, Bostonians might object to occupying the same position with regard to New York that Liverpool does to London, but with the development of the port and the increased volume of business that would result sentimental considerations might be waived.

Yet this same tendency to reach out by rail to accelerate the transoceanic trip gives even a vague hint that the most swiftly moving traffic might be handled at St. John, New Brunswick, making both New York and Boston but stopping places on the way. This tendency to make the first landfall the haven is what has led the Cunard line to give commercial importance to Fishguard, in Wales; but before any such time arrives for St. John the business of the American seaboard will doubtless have grown to such dimensions that it will be only a differentiation of traffic, the more leisurely arriving at and departing from the metropolitan ports, where goodbys and welcomes can be voiced as at present.

The Closing Campaign

IT CANNOT be truthfully said that the political campaign which will practically come to a close this week has been of a character calculated to create rejoicing in the ranks of the judicious. It has centered rather in one great personality than on any great public question. In no small sense, the personality and influence of Colonel Roosevelt have been felt in all the states as well as in New York, and to a great degree the result of the election in many states will be determined by the popular acceptance or rejection of the ideas in politics for which he stands.

But these very ideas have been presented rather in the abstract than in the concrete, when presented at all. The trend of discussion in New York state lately has been away from the issues in which the masses of the people are interested and toward matters of moment only to those engaged in practical politics. Even Colonel Roosevelt has been departing from subjects of wider and engaging in subjects of narrower interest. And all this has been, and is being, reflected in the campaigns of other states. Scarcely a single one of the issues of national importance outlined in what is known as the Taft legislative program—a program which must of necessity be dealt with, partly or wholly, by the Congress about to be elected—has been discussed, save in the most perfunctory and unsatisfactory manner, during the last month or six weeks.

In nearly all the states the contest is either one of personality or generality; in some of them, and notably in New York, Massachusetts, Ohio and Illinois, it is a mixture of the two, and the mixture is not a happy one.

Just what the coming election will result in, beyond throwing some men out of office and putting some other men in, it is difficult to see, unless it shall be the means of giving the Democratic party a chance to prove whether it is equal to one of the greatest opportunities that have ever come to it.

IF wheat were put on the free list, how would that affect American turkeys?

Americanization of Canada

ANY opinion advanced by so able an authority as Henry Vivian, member of Parliament for Birkenhead, Eng., is entitled to respect, but there are thousands of families in the United States who will take exception to his statement that Americanization of Canada is threatened [illegible] "the substitution of the tenement [illegible] home." Neither will Americans, nor [illegible], accept without argument his asseveration that "no nation will survive for any length of time the segregation of its people in barrack-like tenements." All will agree with him, however, that "the strength of the empire is found in the homes of its people much more than in the building of dreadnoughts." The home, though, is well defined as one's dwelling place, and it must be confessed that there appears to be no logical reason why the tenement cannot be a home just as much as a two or three story house with lawn and barn.

The tenement in its best form is increasingly common in the twentieth century city. Economy, convenience and pleasure have been regarded as reasons for improving and multiplying so helpful a factor in urban existence. Not every city dweller can have a luxuriously appointed home, but many of them find it impossible to rent four or five rooms and a bath, lighted by electricity or gas and heated by steam or hot water. In New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and other large American cities the tenement is an institution whereof popularity grows instead of diminishing. Higher standards govern its construction than in former years. If Canadians build tenements after the best of American methods, the general verdict there undoubtedly will be in their favor.

Canada, like Australia and other progressive territories of Great Britain, is adopting those modern ideas that seem to adapt themselves most readily to the country's needs. With all deference to Mr. Vivian, the desire of Canada to have up-to-date tenements can hardly be regarded logically as Americanization, whatever the statement may mean politically. If Canada makes use of the world's best ideas, no matter where she finds them, it may be said that such a course is only a proper method of self-development.

Cost and Reward of Civic Beauty

NOW that a loan of £250,000,000, equal to about $47,000,000, and authorized by the municipality of Paris has been subscribed by Parisians thirty times over for the sake of beautifying their city, the first thing that will strike many readers, perhaps, is that there is plenty of money for investment in the French capital. The thing about it, however, that ought to impress the outside world most forcibly is that among the Parisians there is hardly any limit to confidence in Paris. This extraordinary oversubscription carries with it still another point of great importance for city dwellers everywhere, namely, that Parisians, who have in the past been taxed more than the people of any other European city for civic improvement—for municipal beautification—are convinced that investments made with that end in view always pay.

It probably will be said that Paris is a holiday city and that it can afford to make expenditures for show beyond any that could be safely undertaken by many other great cities. The lesson to be drawn from the experience of Paris in this line, nevertheless, is not weakened by any such contention. Every city need not go as deeply into civic beautification as Paris, and yet every city in this and other countries that has spent money liberally with the purpose of making itself more attractive for its own inhabitants and for visitors has found that it pays.

Behind the desire of the Parisians for a beautiful city there is, of course, a strong artistic impulse; but it is safe to say that business considerations have been powerful influences operating in favor of the costly improvements provided for by the new loan. And if business ends are attained through the promotion of what makes for the elevation and satisfaction of popular taste, there should be no objection on this score. On the contrary, the thing is to encourage the idea that business and art may work successfully together.

REALLY, nothing else would have done but for an American to capture that Liberty statue aviation cup.
